Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor, and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors. (Copyright 1963—General Features Corp.)

Hugh R. — Now that he can no longer use Mother, he wants her to leave.

Roger R. — We're selling our home and traveling around. He has room.

Hugh R. — Our mother is in her 70s and since Dad's death 21 years ago, she has lived with Roger and his family. While she could act as maid, nurse, babysitter, they welcomed her. But now the children are grown, she's in the way. So they want to ship her to me, 1,000 miles away from all her friends and familiar haunts. He should set her up out there and we'll all visit her.

Roger R. — Here's a chance for Hugh's youngsters to get to know their grandmother and for her to enjoy a change of scenery and new experiences. I took Mother in when she had no place to go. Hugh had just been married and played deaf and dumb on the subject of Mother. No domestic work was ever forced on her, as Hugh hints. We always had part-time help. Whatever chores Mother performed, I'm sure she enjoyed them.

The Council: Throughout this harangue one listens for one still small voice — Mother's. What's her line? She probably feels like a bouncing ball in the game of Who'll Take Mother. As such she may well prefer to hide or go out of bounds, rather than belong to either side. . . . Exactly what gives Roger feels Mother is bored and needs a change-of-venue. Hugh wants to keep Mother a "distant" relative, with his children knowing her as a picture on his desk and a nice lady to visit. The logical compromise is to set Mother up in a pleasant living arrangement outside both homes, in milieu of her choice. In view of her age and the ties developed in Roger's community, we do not advise the drastic uprooting he suggests. To fill any void in her life, the local family agency can turn her into a "foster grandma" for families without a real one. Displaced grandmothers like this one are in great demand, say the experts.

American Policies Claimed Puzzling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Mme. Ngo Nhu, South Viet Nam's controversial First Lady, believes Americans are sympathetic to her but "puzzled like me" about U.S. policies towards her country.

Mme. Nhu, on an unofficial tour of the United States, said the American people have heard only one side of the story about Viet Nam. "For once they hear something else," she said Sunday.

She criticized the State Department for suspending some U.S. economic aid to Viet Nam when "we are winning the war." She said she considered it proof that the United States was trying to stir up the Vietnamese against the government headed by her brother-in-law, Ngo Dinh Diem.

Mme. Nhu predicted that Viet Nam would repay all aid provided by the United States, and said that even now her country is looking for ways to reduce U.S. help.

'Little Rich Girl' To Stay in Private School, Judge Says

OLYMPIA, Wash. (UPI)—The thought of a 12-year-old heiress to more than $2.5 million going to public school is more than the conscience of Chief Justice Richard B. Ott of the Washington State Supreme Court can stand.

Ott has refused to issue an order which would have cut off the $300-a-month allowance which Victoria Harrison Ivarsson, who has been described as an international "poor little rich girl," draws from her inheritance.

Stuart G. Oles, a Seattle attorney who is Victoria's court-appointed guardian at law, told Ott that if the money was stopped "the girl would have to leave school."

Ott said, "I don't feel that we should deny Victoria the right to have as good an education as her station in life would demand. My conscience wouldn't permit me to take this child out of school for the money involved here."

Victoria lives with her mother, Julie Ivarsson, and her adoptive father, Karl Ivarsson, in Zermatt, Switzerland. But the girl's money is in a Seattle bank.

Inherited From Father
She inherited the estate from her father, Edward Harrison, who died in a Seattle golf course shortly after Victoria was born. Harrison, heir to part of the Weyerhaeuser timber fortune, died after a broken golf club pierced his body.

Oles said that Victoria was currently attending St. George's English Language school in Montreux, Switzerland. Tuition is 1,000 Swiss francs and board and room costs another 250 francs, he said.

Oles explained that there are about four francs to the dollar. King County Superior Court Judge Lloyd Shorett authorized the $300 payment. Victoria's grandmother, Mrs. Jane Harrison of Auburn, Calif., appealed the ruling of the Supreme court. She contends that money from the estate is being used to support the Ivarsson family.

Robert O. Wells, a Seattle attorney representing Mrs. Harrison, asked Ott for the order suspending payments until after the appeal is decided by the high court.

He said that if the court rules the allowance is not justified, the girl's estate would not be able to recover the support money unless payments are halted now.

Wells claimed that the Ivarsson family was using Virginia's money indirectly to invest in a hotel in Zermatt.

Too Much Into Business
Wells said that Ivarsson was plowing too much of the profits from his hotel back into the business.

Congress Nears End of Session

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress with only 10 weeks remaining in this session continued to search today for a way to pull itself out of its 10-month lethargy.

Lawmakers, who normally adjourn by September, have been in session since January, and are beginning to wonder if they will have a vacation before the second session of the 88th Congress starts.

Rumors of "understanding" by which either taxes or civil rights would be postponed until 1964 have circulated for weeks. So far, all have been denied by party leaders.

The House now hopes to have its omnibus civil rights bill out of committee in about two weeks, and the Senate Finance Committee is proceeding with extended tax bill hearings.

But predictions now are that neither measure will make it in the next ten weeks. With time out for Thanksgiving, Veterans Day and other events, the dwindling session is viewed by many as holding too little time for final action on the tax bill.

There also is some question whether civil rights legislation, even if the Senate gives it the go-ahead over taxes, could pass before the new year.

Albany Newspaper Receives Award

PORTLAND (UPI) — The Alban Democrat-Herald was awarded first place in the merchandising advertising division for Oregon newspapers for 1963 at a two-day meeting which ended here Saturday.

The award was made by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association of Advertising Managers.

The Corvallis Gazette-Times received first place in the special sections division and the Grants Pass Daily Courier was given first in the institutional division.

Len Brown, advertising manager for the Gazette-Times, was named chairman of the association.

VIEW HELPS
MIAMI (UPI) — A Florida service station operator claimed his gallonage sales jumped from 11,000 to 30,000 after he switched to girl attendants, all dressed in shorts.

child to school," Wells said. But Oles said that the Ivarsson hotel "has lost money every year to date."

He said the hotel might have broken even at least this winter but a typhoid epidemic virtually cleared all tourists out of Zermatt.

The Ivarssons just don't have any money," Oles said.

The Supreme court ruled last year that the Ivarssons could not require Victoria's estate to support the family.

The court then returned the case to Shorett. The lower court judge reduced the girl's allowance from $750 a month to the present $300 figure.
