OSU Teachers Have Positions in State This Year

CORVALLIS — About two-thirds of the June teaching graduates from Oregon State University are teaching this fall in Oregon schools, but the record demand for teachers is bringing school administrators from across the U.S. to the campus for interviews with seniors.

Mrs. Kathryn H. Smith, director of teacher placement at OSU, said more administrators than ever before have scheduled campus interview dates for this winter. They will come from as far away as New York, Chicago, Alaska, Hawaii and Guam.

A total of 363 seniors were graduated from the OSU teacher preparation programs in June. Of these, 203 accepted teaching jobs in Oregon; 79 are now teaching in other states, mostly California; and 8 were unavailable for teaching jobs because of military service, graduate school, marriage, or other jobs.

Starting Salaries

Starting salary for the teachers this fall averaged about $5,000, Mrs. Smith indicated.

Opportunities are especially good for men in elementary education, Mrs. Smith noted.

Biggest teacher shortage fields in junior and senior high schools now are English (particularly for women teachers), physical sciences (physics, chemistry, mathematics), girls physical education, and foreign languages.

Teaching opportunitites are considerably brighter in some fields than others, Mrs. Smith noted. Junior and senior high school teachers are expected to be able to teach more than one subject.

In addition to helping place new graduates in their first teaching jobs, Mrs. Smith also helps graduates of past years to find better positions.

Practically all job - seeking teachers were placed, she said. Exceptions include a few persons who were asking for a specific location.

Washington County To Pick Successor

Four candidates are seeking the Republican Central Committee's endorsement. They are Leon Davis, Hugh McGilvra, Mrs. Harold Strawn and Elwin Paxson.

Railroads Win Delay in Grain Hauling Rates

PORTLAND (UPI) — Five railroads serving the Northwest will not have to raise rates for hauling grain to coastal terminals Oct. 31, as ordered earlier by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

An ICC order received in Portland Wednesday delayed the rate increase pending action on a petition for a rehearing by the roads.

The railroads involved are Union Pacific, Northern Pacific, Spokane Portland and Seattle, Great Northern and the Milwaukee Road. They reduced their limited-transit rates in September, 1960, to meet competition from barge and truck lines for the grain-hauling market.

The ICC disallowed the reduced rates Sept. 18, 1963, saying they were "unjust and unreasonable, and in contravention of the national transportation policy." The agency said rates must return to their former level on Oct. 31.

Delay Gained

It was a delay in enforcement of this order which the railroads won with their new petition.

Local grain dealers estimated the roll-back would cost Northwest grain growers nearly $7 a ton.

In their latest petition, the railroads argued that the ICC decision violates the Transportation Act of 1958, which states that rates of a common carrier should not be held at a high level to protect the traffic of competing modes of transportation.

The railroads also took issue with the ICC's position that truck and barge operators with whom they are competing are subject to ICC regulation. Railroad attorneys said this is not true of the grain traffic.

REVEALS HIDING PLACE — Ronald Leigh Ruhnow of San Diego, Calif., looks chipper as he reveals his stowaway hiding place behind a movie screen on board the liner Queen Elizabeth at New York. British immigration authorities refused him permission to go ashore when the ship arrived in Southampton. He was found taking a stroll after leaving the ship by sliding down a mooring line. Ruhnow, 22, said he subsisted on chocolate bars and peanuts during the Atlantic crossing. (UPI)

DESPAIR SHOWN — Fear and despair show in the eyes of this woman whose home borders on the Quang Lo canal, a so-called military "free zone" where there has been no government activity for a long time. The Viet Cong guerrillas have controlled this area for several months, and now that government troops have arrived to drive out the Viet Congs, this woman is unsure whether the new rule will be any better for her and her family than that of the Viet Cong.
