Crab Fishermen Angered by Soviet Fishing Methods

KODIAK, Alaska (UPI)—The brawny, leather-faced Alaskans who earn their living scooping king crabs from the sea are men long on action and short on diplomacy. They're seething in anger at Russian fishermen who have been coming through carefully developed fishing grounds like vacuum sweepers, carelessly gathering huge quantities of crabs and killing and maiming thousands of others.

The crab fishermen's private cold war with their Soviet counterparts could turn hot any day—perhaps to the point of shooting—if the Russians persist in destructive "invasions" of the rich fishing waters off Alaska. Some of the U.S. fishermen are going to sea armed and they don't intend to sit idly by while the Soviets threaten the very existence of this community's $8 million-a-year crab industry by using fishing methods which violate U.S. law.

It all started two years ago, on Thanksgiving Day, when a single-engine plane dipped low over the choppy, steel-gray Gulf of Alaska and state Fish and Game Department employe Ovid McKinley saw a fishing trawler below with a red hammer and sickle painted on its stack. Since that first Soviet vessel was detected in traditional U.S. fishing waters off the 49th state, as many as 82 Russian ships—ranging in size from 127-foot trawlers to 575-foot processing vessels—have been counted off Kodiak Island at one time.

Invasion Of Grounds
American skippers and state officials call it an "invasion" of U.S. developed fishing grounds. Fishermen have testified under oath that Russian vessels are deliberately harassing them, destroying their gear, and as one put it, "generally making themselves obnoxious."

Robert J. Simon, a Fish and Game Department biologist, testified that if Russian fishermen continue their activities, Kodiak's crab fisher could easily be ruined—perhaps within five years. The tension here and on the waters around the island is electric. At least two American skippers are known to have ordered heavy arms—an anti-tank rifle and a small cannon—from surplus firms in Los Angeles and Alexandria, Va.

Recently, U.S. Coast Guard cutters stopped two American vessels—the Eldorado and the North Beach, skippered by Louis Wick and Tom McAllister—in waters off Kodiak and searched them for arms. None was found. The Coast Guard 17th District with headquarters at Juneau, has refused to talk about specifics and says only that the boardings were legal under the Navigation Act and that if any heavy arms are found they will be confiscated.

Extend Patrols
Coast Guard patrols off Kodiak were scheduled to stop Oct. 1, because there usually is little activity during the fall and winter months, but they have been extended until December in an effort to prevent an international incident.

American fishermen have charged repeatedly—and the Coast Guard was reported to have photographs substantiating it—that Russian trawlers deliberately drag their nets through strings of American crab pots, cutting the buoy lines so they can't be retrieved or damaging the pots so badly they are worthless.

As one disgruntled skipper put it: "The ocean's a pretty big place, yet with all of it to wander around in, they insist on going right through our gear." Most of the incidents have taken place in international waters, where the Coast Guard legally is powerless to take action. Some fishermen have reported seeing Russian vessels—particularly whalers—inside the U.S. three-mile limit, but none has ever been caught fishing there.

Even if one were caught, under present law, the Coast Guard could do little since the United States has no laws providing for the arrest or imprisonment of foreign fishermen violating territorial waters. To make matters worse, Russian trawlers have a top speed of 18 knots, while the Coast Guard cutters stationed here can make only 12.

U.S. Advisor Says Reds Want to Slow Our Lunar Project
WASHINGTON (UPI)—A leading space adviser to President Kennedy believes Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's recent space statement was an attempt to slow down the U.S. lunar project, rather than a Soviet withdrawal from the space race. Dr. Edward C. Welsh said Tuesday that the Russians have a "strong space program and are concentrating on it. There is nothing in this (Khrushchev's remarks) to indicate otherwise and no reason to believe they are slackening."

Welsh is executive secretary of the National Aeronautics and Space Council which advises President Kennedy on U.S. space programs. In an interview with United Press International he commented on Khrushchev's weekend review of future Soviet space programs. Encourage U.S. Reduction
Welsh said Khrushchev's comments were an attempt to encourage a reduction in U.S. space efforts so that Russia might maintain any competitive edge it believes it may have.

"He would maintain this advantage on the basis of a slow-down on our part rather than a speedup on his." He added that Khrushchev's remarks were made when Congress was considering the appropriation bill for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA).

Rep. Olin E. Teague, second ranking Democrat on the House Space Committee, said that Khrushchev's remarks ought to be ignored, and that the U.S. space program should not be changed. The Texas congressman added, "I wouldn't trust Khrushchev, even if he swore on a stack of Bibles as high as the Kremlin."

Points Out Keys
After a close review of Khrushchev's statement, Welsh said there were two key sentences: "At the present time we are not planning flights of cosmonauts to the moon. . . . We do not wish to compete in sending people to the moon without thorough preparation." To Welsh, the Soviet leader's statement "did not say Russia would not compete with us on going to the moon." What he did say was that Russia would not dispatch men to the moon without careful advance planning, Welsh said. "The inference he apparently wished to leave," Welsh said, "was that the United States may be willing to risk lives by going ahead hastily but that the Russians won't go until they're ready."

Strike Meet Ends Without Progress

PORTLAND (UPI)—A meeting called in an attempt to settle a strike against Weyerhaeuser Co. operations in the Coos Bay area broke up Wednesday without any progress, according to Federal Mediator Leroy Smith.

Smith said no further meetings were planned, but he will continue to meet individually with the two sides. "I am hopeful further meetings will be called, but there isn't any basis to call one as of the immediate moment," he said.

Local 3-261 of the International Woodworkers of America struck Weyerhaeuser plants at North Bend and logging operations near Allegany earlier this month. Smith said the union had a number of grievances, but he declined to list them specifically. Union Business Agent Ken Johnson of Coos Bay said overtime pay, work required of boom crews and woods loading crews and reinstatement of suspended workers are involved.

Evangelist Refers To Monroe Suicide

HOUSTON, Tex. (UPI)—Evangelist Billy Graham used the suicide of actress Marilyn Monroe Wednesday to illustrate the importance of obedience of moral laws.

Graham was to address a joint meeting today of the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs, the third talk of his four-day visit. Graham said Miss Monroe's death showed that "sex goddesses are not happy." He told 5,000 students of Houston Baptist College that "hundreds of you here would like to try and think you can overcome the odds."

"But if you break the moral laws," Graham said, "there is no sin which will destroy you quicker." "Sex can be a flaming fire for good in your life if used properly."

Graham plans a "crusade for Christ" here in the autumn of 1965 at a domed athletic stadium which is under construction.
