Freeman Conviction Appealed Before State High Court

SALEM (UPI)—The conviction of condemned child slayer Jeannette June Freeman was appealed before the Oregon Supreme Court Wednesday in an effort to determine if her constitutional rights have been violated.

Miss Freeman was convicted in 1961 of throwing Larry Jackson, 6, to death in the Crooked River Gorge in Central Oregon. She was sentenced to die in the gas chamber—the first woman sentenced to death in Oregon.

Miss Freeman's attorneys are asking that the Marion County Circuit Court review her conviction under provisions of the post conviction relief act. They want the court to determine whether her constitutional rights were violated, and if so, to upset the verdict, and remand the case back to Jefferson County Circuit Court at Madras for a new trial.

Representing Miss Freeman were Philip A. Levin and Carl R. Ned, Portland attorneys.

It marked the second time Miss Freeman's case had come before the state high court. The first time was when her case was automatically appealed after her conviction.

Conviction Was Upheld The state court has once upheld her conviction, and the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to hear the case.

Levin told the high court, "The issue before the court is whether Miss Freeman is entitled to a hearing in Marion County Court, or whether she is precluded from further review."

He said, "I find distressing the prevailing attitude that we are trying to exhaust the state courts so we can go to Federal Court."

Provide Hearing "The issue is whether the Oregon courts can provide a hearing."

Levin said Miss Freeman was held in custody for more than
