

THE WEEK IN CALIFORNIA

Mme. Nhu in Beverly Hills As Coup Is Staged in Viet Nam

By United Press International. Mme. Nhu was in a $96 a day Beverly Hills hotel suite when military forces of the South Viet Nam government staged a bloody coup to throw out president Ngo Dinh Diem.

Whether the fiery "Dragon Lady" with her husband considered the real power in the government, was still visiting the United States by accident or design when the coup broke out was a matter of speculation.

She had been scheduled to return to her country last week, but extended her whirlwind trip of the U. S. in order to "rest" in Southern California.

Mme. Nhu said she "definitely" felt the coup by marines, paratroopers, the air force and key units of the army was incited and backed by Americans.

"Oh, definitely," she answered when asked whether she felt the U.S. was behind the coup. "No coup can develop without American incitement and American backing."

She said she had no plans of staying in the U.S. "I cannot stay in a country that stabbed me in the back," she told reporters when she left for noon mass at the Church of the Good Shepherd on All Saints Day.

"I believe all the devils of Hell are against us," she said. "But we will triumph."

She said her husband, powerful Ngo Dinh Nhu, who had been reported assassinated, had expected the coup.

Elsewhere: There were these developments:

Rafferty - Braden: Thomas A. Braden and Dr. Max Rafferty were at odds over U.S. Supreme Court decisions on God in the public schools.

Future court decisions would forbid "the very mention of God" in public schools.

Braden commented, "Personally, I'm sick and tired of the constant misinterpretations of Supreme Court decisions."

"I don't agree that any court has ever instructed the schools cannot instruct boys and girls in their religious heritage."

Prison Strike: Sixty-eight convicts at Folsom prison were sentenced to 29 days in solitary for refusing to return to work with about 1,900 other prisoners who had staged a two-week strike that prompted a brief sympathy strike at San Quentin prison.

The convicts were protesting the wage rate for their work in the prison, and lengthening of terms behind bars for crimes of violence.

Water Plan: The Attorney General and the Metropolitan Water District (MWD) in Los Angeles added their protests to growing opposition in California to the $4 billion Pacific Southwest Water Plan proposed by Interior Secretary Stewart Udall.

Atty. Gen. Stanley Mosk, the first high state official to speak against the plan, said it would turn Northern California into a "water hole" for the entire Pacific Southwest.

Udall's plan would ship large amounts of water from the North to Southern California and other dry areas.

The MWD, meantime, charged the plan would give the federal government "a substantial part" of the state's water resources.

The MWD also objected to a proposal to cut off shipments from the Colorado River in lieu of shipments from Northern California.

Fair Housing: Gov. Edmund G. Brown and the President of the California Real Estate Association collided head on over the association's attempt to nullify the Rumford Fair Housing Law, which bars discrimination in about 60 to 70 per cent of all housing in the state.

Brown asked the real estate industry to halt its efforts to block the law by seeking a ballot proposition.

L. H. Wilson, CREA president, flatly refused. Wilson said, "A mandate from the people is ignored and they should be given an opportunity to express themselves."

Nutrition: A test-tube diet consisting chiefly of amino acid, a protein builder in the human body, was tested on 18 convicts at the Vacaville Medical Facility for 48 days.

Officials reported that the fat prisoners slimmed down, skinny prisoners fattened—and not a single gripe was reported despite the fact that the prisoners had nothing else to eat.

Nutrition experts in the $40,000 project, said the tests were conducted for the U.S. Man in Space Program, but that the diet's chief virtues were "not in space but in medicine."

Menjou: Adolph Menjou, who created an image of the cosmopolitan European gentleman that put him in the front ranks of the motion picture industry for 40 years, died in Hollywood at the age of 73.

The dapper Menjou, born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 18, 1890, succumbed to chronic hepatitis. His greatest critical triumph came from his role as managing editor in the movie "The Front Page."

Pill: A petty theft charge against Mrs. Diane T. Mallory, 23, Palo Alto school teacher, dismissed following a medical report. The report said Mrs. Mallory suffered from "a lapse of consciously controlled behavior triggered by birth control pills."

PET TALK

By M. I. L.

SPORTS?

At one time in American history, the forests were stocked with a variety of game birds and animals which the Indians used at a prime source of food.

But to them hunting was not regarded as a pleasure; to them it was a vital necessity. Every bit of the slain animal was used, not even the bones were wasted.

It was the white hunter who caused the near extinction of the buffalo in the western part of the United States.

The health, then, specimen of which died on Martha's Vineyard in 1932, is another splendid example of man's powers of ruthless extermination. These game birds were long a target for the guns of man, not to mention the depletion they often caused by man's gross negligence.

Today hunting has turned into a source of pleasure and has become a big money making proposition. Huge sums are spent annually by ardent followers of the "sport," as it is now called. The federal and state governments are pressured into regulating hunting in order to make it more attractive and lasting to its devotees.

Is it a feather in Uncle Sam's hat that, beside the health, passenger pigeon and American eagle are becoming extinct, many other native birds and beasts are already well on their way to extinction caused directly by the "sport" of hunting?

The advertising and appeal to our pre-teenagers is not to be ignored. Toy bows and arrows and toy rifles are attached to colorful cardboard pictures of deer, ducks and bear. Miniatures of these animals are provided to make the play more "realistic." The next step is to go out and kill or maim a bird or pet.

What happens to the moral and spiritual values of a nation when these children become adults? What is happening now to the men and women who thus snuff out life so lightly, then grin and boast about it afterward?

The annual hunting season is a gruesome business unbecoming a gentleman and a Christian. Some of the quietest, peaceful mortals grow positively bloodthirsty. Many are indiscriminate in their hunting and end up killing a farmer's cow or even one of their hunting companions. Very little of the animal life that falls before their gunfire is converted into food. Thus, a shameful waste of money and irreparable lives occurs all in the name of "sport."

Cub hunting is the vilest "sport" of all. Baby foxes are dug from their shelters and thrown to packs of young hounds to be torn to pieces. This is to acquaint them with their prey before the fox hunting proper begins.—England Evening Mail.

Merton and Betty Bradshaw are seeking a restraining order and injunction against Cascade Ranches, Inc., in Jackson County Circuit Court to prevent Cascade Ranches from obtaining grazing land now leased from the Bureau of Land Management.

In their complaint, the Bradshaws claim they sold 640 acres on Little Bottle Creek to Cascade Ranches that Cascade applied to BLM for grazing rights on Osborn and Lake Creeks, acreage which the Bradshaws lease from BLM.

This clause also provides that if Cascade Ranches voids the agreement it must pay the Bradshaws $7,500 in damages, according to the complaint.

The Bradshaws state that Cascade Ranches has now applied for land exchange to BLM, or are attempting to purchase the land now under lease. This would result in permanent injury to the Bradshaws cattle operation, they claim.
