Election Fans Race Controversy In Kentucky

By AL KUETNER
United Press International
Kentucky is a state that has moved with comparative ease into racial integration. Not since 1956, when there was a flareup at Sturgis and Clay over school desegregation, has there been a really major controversy over the race problem.

The 1963 governor's race, decided Tuesday, changed that tranquil situation somewhat by the injection as a campaign issue of Gov. Bert Combs' executive order banning racial discrimination in every business licensed by the state.

The governor's job, for which Combs was not eligible for another term, was fought for by Edward Breathitt, a Democrat, and Louis B. Nunn, a Republican.

Breathitt was the apparent winner by a slim majority. Nunn Opposed Order.

Nunn came out strongly in opposition to the Combs racial order and announced as part of his platform that he would rescind it if elected.

Breathitt, accusing Nunn of injecting race into a Kentucky gubernatorial campaign for the first time in the 20th century, said he would leave it up to the legislature to decide the fate of the anti-discrimination order.

Political observers in Kentucky were watching the election outcome closely as a signal of undercurrent racial feelings and the relative current strength of the Democrats and Republicans going into the 1964 presidential race.

Nunn's outspoken opposition to the Combs' order could throw heavy Negro vote strength to the Democratic candidate in a state that went Republican in the 1960 election for President.

Actually, all the fuss concerned an order that has not gone into effect yet. Tavern owners of Louisville have filed a state court suit—not yet heard—claiming they are private clubs and therefore exempt from the order.

Combs, who goes out of office next month, has delayed implementing his order until the court case is decided. Thus, it will be up to the next administration to put the order to any use.

By including in his order all businesses licensed by the state, Combs took in just about everything, including eating places which have to obtain State Health Department licenses. One Kentucky critic complained the governor had included every business except houses of ill repute.

Nunn says he is against the order on constitutional and not racial grounds. Which ever way the ball finally bounces on the Combs' order, it means that Kentucky probably will be airing for some time to come the governor's bold step to end legally most segregation in the state.

Authentic Stones Will Be on View
NEW YORK (UPI)—At the entrance to the American-Israel pavilion here of the 1964-65 World's Fair will be a display of authentic stones from King Solomon's Mines.

The 6,000 square foot spiral shaped building will be sheathed in rough cut African mahogany with an exterior paneled wall containing relief sculptures in sand, representing the 12 tribes of Israel.

Actual Count Made Of Minnesota Lakes
ST. PAUL, Minn. (UPI)—Minnesota, the Land of Ten Thousand Lakes, has exactly 13,871 lakes of ten acres or more in size.

Gov. Karl F. Rolvaag announced the results of the recent study made by the Minnesota Conservation Department's division of waters—the first time Minnesota's lakes were counted in more than 100 years of statehood.

Early Yule Spending Hope of Businessmen
NEW YORK (UPI)—Businessmen hope much of this season's Christmas buying will be done before Thanksgiving. Market researchers for Bulova Watch Co. note that there are only 22 shopping days—an unusually small number—between the two holidays. November, however, has five Fridays—paydays—giving encouragement to buy early promotions.

CURRICULUM CHANGE
BELOTI, Wis. (UPI)—Beloit College has introduced sweeping curriculum changes designed to give students greater responsibility for their own learning. The plan emphasizes progression at a student's own rate, independent study, a required period of off-campus study, and a wide range of elective courses.
