Education Week Directs Attention To Major Aspects

By DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist

The theme for American Education Week, Nov. 10-16, is "Education Strengthens the Nation." The purpose of the week is to concentrate attention upon education as a major factor in our society.

As the nation pays tribute to educators, interest will be directed towards seven important aspects of education. Beginning on Sunday the topics for consideration are: Values of free men; Learning opportunities for all; Quality teaching; Balanced curriculum; Community resources; Financial support; goals for tomorrow.

The effectiveness of the program depends on the cooperative efforts of you and the school. Many state and national organizations will be participating.

Each community should make an attempt to learn more about its schools. A school reflects the desires of the community for which it exists. The quality of the educational program will depend upon the interest and support of the public.

Parents have a direct interest in the schools because of their children. Most schools direct their programs toward parents. Perhaps this year an effort will be made to reach all members of the community even if they do not have children attending the schools. They are all indirectly benefit from education.

Modern education extends beyond the schools. It involves community services and the home. Success, therefore, is dependent upon close cooperation between all these areas.

Our nation has grown to recognize that its education system is the backbone of its culture. No other area has so much to offer in terms of maintaining and improving the nation's position at home and abroad.

American Education Week should only be the beginning.

The community's interest and support must continue throughout the year. It is only by continuous evaluation, research and support that the standards and quality of our schools will continue to rise. The schools will increase their effectiveness if the community will put forth the necessary efforts.

BAD AUSSEE, Austria (UPI) — The government has decided to continue searching the bottom of Lake Toplitz for possible Nazi treasurers despite the high cost of the project. Diving operations so far this year have cost an estimated $165,000. An Austrian Ministry of Interior spokesman said German army officers reportedly dumped documents and treasures into the lake at the end of World War II.
