

Travel Association Approves Plans To Expand Program

SALEM — An expanded program of state-wide participation in travel promotion activities has been approved at the fall board meeting of the Oregon Chapter of the Pacific Northwest Travel Association.

A principal feature of the 1964 program will be workshops for persons in the travel and recreation industry to help build tourism in the state, according to J. T. McMahon, Grants Pass, president of the Oregon Chapter.

The first workshop will be held about May 1, McMahon said. All Oregon members of PNTA, chamber of commerce managers or representatives, travel associations and resort, hotel and motel operators will be invited to participate in the two-day session.

The Oregon group also hopes to expand its participation in travel shows in the west and in playing host to major travel writers from around the nation, McMahon said.

The group appointed Ray Henderson, Portland, manager of the Oregon Motor Hotel Association, as chairman of a committee on membership.

Other officers of the Oregon chapter are Francis Snodgrass, La Grande, vice president; Don McNeil, Medford, secretary-treasurer.

Board members are George Kolzow, Oceanlake; V. A. McNeil, Portland; Marion Cady, Bend; Fred Brenne, Eugene; Dudley McClure, Portland; Dennis Clarke, Salem; Norris Johnson, Corvallis; Bob Cooper, Newport; and Pete Beall, McMinnville.

Graduate Research Center Called Major Step

By YVONNE FRANKLIN
Mall Tribune Washington Bureau
WASHINGTON (Special)—The House of Representatives by a 258-92 vote last week approved the $1.2 billion higher education bill, which Rep. Edith Green, the sponsor, predicted would move Oregon a step closer to a graduate research center.

She said Oregon could match the massive industrial complex she recently observed around Stanford University at Palo Alto, Calif. The legislation includes $25 million for 1964 and $60 million each for 1965-66 for grants to aid construction of graduate research centers in the 50 states.

Mrs. Green said that it was her understanding that there were several million dollars in pledged funds from industry and other sources in the Portland area to bring an Oregon graduate center into being. But she spoke with perplexity over the slowness of concrete plans to develop at the Oregon level.

Important Step
"Two years ago I invited James Webb, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, to come to Portland and talk with business and industrial leaders about the possibilities of getting space age industries into Oregon," she said, "and Webb told them that one of the most important things was to get a graduate research center."

"Other cities have the same idea," she warned, stressing that she could not urge too strongly that Oregonians be ready with strong plans if they want to share in the federal money and the space age industry.

Mrs. Green predicted that NASA within the next few years will be second only to the Defense Department in the amount of funds expended in loans and grants for research and other studies through America's colleges and universities.

The NASA contracts, she said, are clustered around the big research centers, such as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cal. Tech., and the University of California at Berkeley.

She noted that there will be strong competition for federal funds by other states and there was no assurance that Oregon would automatically share in the federal money for a research center, unlike the automatic allocation of construction money for undergraduate facilities.

Further information may be obtained by writing to Aviation Programs, U. S. Naval Air Station, Seattle, 98115, Chief Hawkins stated.

All funds in the construction bill are to be allocated at the State level, with exception of the money for the graduate research centers. The Commissioner of Education in Washington, D. C. will determine which states are granted construction money (up to one-third) on a first come, first served basis, she said, according to the strength of their plans.

Plans Inadequate
Portland lost out on federal planning grant money for a pilot project in working to curb juvenile delinquency last year because of the inadequacy of plans submitted by officials in Portland. Educators, scientists, business, industrial and civic leaders in Oregon, working with Gov. Mark Hatfield and the State Board of Planning and Development, have been formulating plans for the research center for the past three years. There is no state money presently allotted for such a graduate center.

"We have been working this week with an agency trying to get them into Oregon," Mrs. Green said, "and the first question they asked was 'have you a graduate research center?' We answered that this is coming, that the people in Oregon are working together and have made tentative plans for this. Having a center will make all the difference in the world as to whether or not we're successful."

The proposed center would allow private and public colleges and universities to share in research and study facilities which none could individually support. Five independent colleges—Lewis and Clark, Linfield, Reed, University of Portland, Willamette university and Pacific University — have pledged funds for initial planning expenses. The center also has the support of the Portland Junior Chamber of Commerce as well.

The location of the center has not been decided upon. Besides Mrs. Green, Reps. Robert B. Duncan and Al Ull-

Americans joined in service for GOD and COUNTRY

45 Years Ago...
Armistice Day
November 11, 1918

The battle was over, but out of the horror and devastation wrought by war there sprang an association dedicated to the perpetuation of the lofty principles for which that war was fought — Justice, Freedom, and Democracy.

TODAY... Veterans Day
November 11, 1963

The American Legion — whose members are united by a grim bond forged in war and strengthened by memories of heroism, sacrifice, affection, and devotion — has become a dynamic symbol that patriotism continues to be a virtue... that service to country does not end when the military uniform is put aside... that there is still a sacred duty to exalt the precious heritage of American citizenship.
