Small Worlds Around Us

He Was Popular Fellow
—Especially With Crows
Its life span was relatively short; it was usually removed when the corn plants were "knee high." By that time it supposedly had served its purpose and it was in the way of the cultivator. Its inception and prime of life was in the early spring at corn planting time. Made of a couple of sticks, in the shape of a rude cross, and dressed in ragged clothes stuffed with straw — it was a scarecrow.

On the top was a torn, straw hat or maybe a bonnet that had outgrown its usefulness, but good enough for a scarecrow. It was intended to scare away the crows.

Food had been less than plentiful for the birds during the previous winter months. Now they welcomed spring and some grain to eat. The birds waited for the farmer to leave the field; leave it with the scarecrow to guard the buried seeds.

Hat Holds Fast
The summer breeze, or at least the wind that would bring in the summer, lifted the fleshless sleeves of the ragged coat; the straw filling rustled and the old hat tipped, vibrated, but held fast to the wooden skeleton.

All these things were expected to keep the hungry crows from the field and protect the early growth of the corn plants.

Along about July the fourth, the corn that was planted "when the leaves of the oak tree were as big as a squirrel's ears" was expected to be knee high.

Under the influence of the warming sun and frequent rains the corn plants shot up into the air. As they grew ever higher, the ragged apparition seemed to grow shorter until only the floppy hat and a few tufts of straw showed above the tassels.

But by then the scarecrow would have served its purpose. The old clothes had all but fallen away and the wooden skeleton sagged tiredly toward the earth.
