Disappearance of Coed Continues To Baffle Police

ALBANY, Calif. (UPI) — The mystery of the whereabouts of University of California coed Judy Williamson continued to baffle Albany police today, with the uneventful passing of another "very crucial" period.

Police Chief Ralph Jensen built up suspense in the 17-day mystery Wednesday with the midday statement that he expected to announce "a big break" shortly before midnight. He described it as a "very crucial day."

However, newsmen who kept a 12-hour vigil at the police station were told in a press conference shortly before midnight that "perhaps tomorrow (Thursday) we will have something better to go on."

Jensen did reveal that blood-stained books belonging to the 18-year-old coed were found in an open trash container on the campus of the university. The discovery of the books was announced Tuesday night, but police declined at that time to say where or when they were found.

Jensen said Wednesday night that they were found by a man on the campus on Nov. 4 or Nov. 5, but he emphasized the man "is not a suspect at this time."

The books were only the second major clue in the case since Miss Williamson disappeared while en route from her Albany home to the university at nearby Berkeley on the morning of Oct. 29.

The first major clue came Monday when an 11-year-old boy turned over to police an umbrella the girl had been carrying on the day she disappeared. The boy said he found the umbrella in a trash can near a supermarket.
