

This Week's Plan for Home Builders

By HIAWATHA ESTES

This small two bedroom home has more distinction and character than is found in many larger homes. The planning is compact and efficient without any feeling of being cramped. In fact, the modest size of this design belies its unusual livability.

Note the outstanding traffic circulation from the entry and center hall to every room in the house.

This impressive kitchen layout is an excellent example of how far professional planning can help you in your quest for a convenient, workable kitchen. It can boast of all the latest built-ins, a wide floor to ceiling pantry and an exceptionally generous sized dining area. Laundry facilities and a water heater are in the garage while the forced air furnace opens to the bedroom hall.

Wide wardrobes separate each of the bedrooms from the bath. The location of the windows in the master bedroom provides a cross ventilation and yet does not interfere with furniture arrangement. A deep window is next to the wardrobe — where furniture would not be located because of wardrobe access — and a high sliding window is on the opposite wall.

A huge linen closet opens to the bedroom hall while a guest closet opens to the entry.

The impressive layout of the living room lends itself to a variety of furniture arrangements, all of which take full advantage of the wide fireplace. The fireplace only projects into the room a short distance so as to take very little livable space away from this room.

The bath features a pullman lavatory which is separated from the water closet by a half-wall with obscure glass above. There is both a tub and shower. If a separate shower is not desired, this space could be used as a closet which would open to the hall.

The plan has been designed for a wide lot. However, it could be built on a vary narrow lot if it were rotated 90 degrees counterclockwise and the garage door and window location reversed.

The rustic ranch exterior as illustrated here is still one of our most popular designs.

Complete working drawings for this plan can be purchased at a cost of $7.50 for the first set and $5 for each additional set when ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these prices until March 10. Please allow two to three weeks for delivery. The following home plan books are also available: Hallmark Homes, $1; Homes by Hiawatha, $1; Town and Country Homes, $1; Homes for Living, $1; Distinctive Homes, $1; Ranch and Modern Homes, $2. All books, a $7 value, only $5. Send all orders for either plans or books to: Hiawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-T, Northridge, Calif.

Unexpected Treasures Found In Diggings at St. Peter's

By RAY MOSELY
United Press International

VATICAN CITY (UPI) —One of the fascinating adventures of modern archeology — and religion — began here almost a quarter of a century ago.

It was the search for the tomb of St. Peter.

For almost 2,000 years Catholic tradition had held that St. Peter's Basilica, the largest church in the world, was built over the tomb of the Apostle. But from the Middle Ages, the tradition had been questioned by both scholars and heretics.

Archeologists began chipping into stone below the great church in 1939 to try to clear up the controversy.

In years of patient digging that still goes on to a limited degree, they turned up unexpected treasures — entire mausoleums from a pagan and Christian cemetery, the earliest examples of Christian art known to exist, coins dating back to the late Roman Empire and ancient marble tables.

But did they find the tomb of St. Peter?

Pope's Announcement

On Dec. 23, 1950, the late Pope Pius XII, who had ordered the excavations and had sometimes visited them in workman's overalls, announced to the world in a dramatic message that the tomb had been found. His successors have spoken in similar terms.

But the archeologists are more cautious. They say they found a tomb under the main altar of St. Peter's which is almost certainly that of the Apostle—but they can't be sure.

The key to the puzzle lies in bones which were found in the tomb.

For 13 years these bones have been in the Institute of Legal Medicine at the University of Rome, where scientists have conducted tests trying to establish if they could be Peter's.

The most interesting test involves an attempt to determine if the bones are from the same body as a skull that has been in the Roman Cathedral of St. John Lateran for centuries and that tradition says is the skull of Peter.

Tests Inconclusive

So far, the tests are inconclusive. If they should some day establish that the bones and skull are from the same body, then the mystery would be solved. But if the results of the tests are negative, this won't necessarily prove anything — since it could very well be that the bones are authentic and the skull is not.

The mystery about St. Peter stems from the fact that no definite information about his last years is known to exist. Historically it is not even certain that Peter ever came to Rome, although evidence for this is rather strong from writings of the period.

The only mentions of his death are in the writings of Tertullian and Origen, two of the early Church fathers. Tertullian says Peter was crucified under Nero, which would place the date of his death at about 64 A.D. Origen adds that he was crucified head downward at his own request.

But both of these men wrote several centuries after Peter's time, and it is not certain if they wrote on the basis of established fact or simply tradition. Some scholars maintain that if Peter actually was the author of the First Epistle of Peter in the Bible, he almost certainly lived beyond the reign of Nero.

Catholic Tradition

Catholic tradition says the crucifixion of the Apostle occurred in the Circus of Nero next to a pagan cemetery and that Peter was buried on the spot. In 258, Christians fearing for the safety of the body supposedly moved it to the catacombs of St. Sebastian on the ancient Appian Way, but it was later returned to the original spot and a shrine built over it. In the Fourth Century the Emperor Constantine replaced the shrine with the original St. Peter's Basilica, which in turn was replaced by the present St. Peter's Basilica in the 16th Century.

The archeological diggings under St. Peter's have turned up impressive evidence to support the traditions.

The tomb below the main altar unquestionably is that of some very important person. A stone stairway that still exists was built outside of it so visitors could look down into it.

More than 1,500 coins from all countries of Europe and from the Near East, dating from the late Roman Empire to early Renaissance times, were found in the tomb — indicating it was a place of pilgrimages.

St. Peter is known to have lived to an old age, and the bones found there are those of an old man.

Prof. Margherita Guarducci, an Italian woman archeologist, has decoded inscriptions on the walls of the grottoes revealing frequent mentions of the name of Peter.

Finally, historians and archeologists point out that St. Peter's Basilica is built on the slopes of a hill (although it is so huge that this isn't apparent to the eye) and is on unstable, watery ground.

The only logical explanation for the choice of such an unsuitable building site, they say, is that Constantine wanted the church to be directly over the grave of the Apostle.

Western Jobs Show Upswing

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Employment in the West was on the upswing in September, the U.S. Department of Labor reported today.

Nonagricultural job-holders in the 13 western states totaled 9,337,900. This was an increase of 55,800 jobs, well over the normal seasonal gain for mid-September.

Reasons for the gain included heavier hiring in manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade, and state and local government.

States covered in the survey are Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

FINGERPRINTED

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California's foster parents will have to be fingerprinted. Officials decided that is the only way to carry out a new state law requiring them to be checked for criminal records.

'Packaged Air Raids' Now Produced in United States

By DOUGLAS DILTZ
United Press International

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) —The United States, which has a genius of being able to package almost anything, has even managed to package a simulated nuclear war.

The mock war creates the realistic illusion of an enemy missile and bomber attack on the U.S.

This unique product, developed by the System Development Corp., (SDC), is called "Packaged Air Raids."

Of course, you won't find it in the supermarkets like most other packaged products. The simulated attack is highly classified and is available only to the military forces for training and testing the nation's military retaliatory strength.

The North American Air Defense (NORAD) center at Colorado Springs, Colo., uses the "Packaged Air Raids" to see how well all of its commands react to a make-believe nuclear war.

Because of the training provided by "Packaged Air Raids," military leaders say the U.S. now would be able to counter a missile-bomber attack on this nation with great swiftness and effectiveness—so as to be able to retaliate with a devastating blow against the enemy.

SDC produces electronic computer tapes, films and maps which recreate virtually every aspect of a possible nuclear-age battle.

When a command wants to simulate an attack, it runs a tape through a computer, triggering simulated full-scale war conditions. Maps, charts and films flash on screens and blips appear on radar scopes.

Information includes such things as weather, weapons, missile trajectories, speed of enemy aircraft.

Operational personnel respond as if it were actual war—tracking, monitoring the tactical actions, engaging and destroying hostile air objects.

"Virtually every detail needed to fight such a battle is thrown at the military," says W. S. Melahn, manager of SDC's Air Defense Division.

There are about 100 different simulated attacks on the U.S., including total attack.

Operation Desk Top

Perhaps the best known "attack" is one called "Operation Desk Top." This exercise simulates total nuclear war and tests reactions and capabilities of personnel at bases from the far reaches of the early warning radar lines to installations within the heartland of the U.S. itself. The attack itself is changed regularly.

In one such simulated full-scale attack, more than 2,000 officers and 8,000 enlisted men at 250 U.S. air defense sites took part. To produce the mock battle, scientists designed and produced 28,000 feet of display film, 33,600 feet of computer tape and more than 6 million square feet of machine - produced maps.

During the course of the attack some 5 billion calculations were made by the computers to simulate the millions of miles flown by the invading bomber force and U.S. interceptor planes.

It was estimated that it would have cost several million dollars to use a force of live aircraft for this mock battle. By using the packaged air raids, the same effect was achieved for less than 1-100th of this cost.

Attitude Toward Russian Militia Surprise to West

By JAY AXELBANK
United Press International

MOSCOW (UPI) — A Russian motorist was waved to a halt recently by a stern Moscow "people's militiaman" and accused of having a dirty car. That's an offense here that can cost you a ruble ($1.10) fine on the spot.

This particular driver, as he recounted the incident, was sure he was going to lose a ruble until he spotted the militiaman's own messy boots.

"How about the mud on them," he said. "What kind of an impression does that make?"

The blue-coated militiaman grunted and waved the motorist on.

For a nation with the memory of terror from Stalin's dreaded security police, the casual and sometimes disdainful attitude Russians have for their militia often comes as a surprise to a Westerner.

But even under Stalin the cop who walked a beat or directed traffic—as distinct from the security police who arrested people for political crimes—was frequently the butt of good natured jokes.

Angry militiamen have been known to get sassed back when trying to lecture a driver for dangerous passing or when warning a pedestrian for jaywalking.

A Moscow housewife, when asked why Russians sometimes can "get away with murder" in situations that would mean a trip to court in the West, explained:

"Militiamen are one of us. They are people's militia, remember that. Their job is to protect me." The accent was on the word me.

Same Cops

Russian militiamen, who are armed with revolvers and carry white billy sticks, do all the things that a Kansas City or Omaha policeman does: catch thieves, recover missing children, combat burglars, direct traffic, take information in auto accidents, and so on.

They are separate from the KGB or Komitet Gosudarstvenno Bezopasnosti (Committee of State Security), the organization which deals with security matters. The militia come under the Ministry for the Preservation of Social Order and, like Western police forces, have separate homicide and criminal investigation branches.

The reason the term militia is used in this country is that the Communists abolished such words as "police," "officer" and "minister." To the Bolsheviks these words conjured up czarist authoritarianism. Eventually "officer" and "minister" found their way back into the Russian vocabularly but "police" stayed out.)

Illinois Grange Service Winner

PORTLAND (UPI) — Leadership in a campaign to build a community nursing home and relieve a shortage of hospital beds has won the Shiloh Valley Grange of Mascoutah, Ill., first place in the National Grange's annual community service program.

The award and $10,000 first prize money was presented Wednesday night at the Grange's annual convention.

Second place and a $5,000 prize went to Goodwill Grange of Grant, Va., for its participation in a number of projects, and the third place award of $3,000 was presented to North Lincoln Grange of Delake, Ore., for leading a drive to provide ambulance service for three Oregon coastal communities.

Earlier, it was announced that fourth prize of $2,000 had been awarded to Redlands Mesa Grange near Hotchkiss, Colo., and fifth prize of $1,500 to Indian Mound Grange of Melbourne, Fla.

Gov. Mark Hatfield was scheduled to address the Grange convention today, on "Membership Day." The nine-day session lasts through Tuesday.

LEADING NORMAL LIVES — Folkje, left, and Tjitske de Vries made news around the world 10 years ago when they were born Siamese twins. Separated during a delicate operation performed by a Dutch surgeon, the girls—happy and well—are leading normal lives in Bergum, Holland. (UPI)
