

Citizens' Committee Nearing End of Secondary School Study

The Citizens' Advisory Committee on Education for School District 549C is in the final stages of its study of the secondary school situation, and recommendations will be made to the school board in the near future.

The committee and its subcommittees have held a series of meetings in the past few months in which various phases of the secondary school program, building needs and other aspects of the problem have been reviewed and discussed.

A series of individual subcommittee meetings will be held in the near future by all of the groups. Some of the meetings will be held this week. After the series of meetings, subcommittees will report to the steering committee and a list of recommendations compiled for submitting to the board.

May Contact Members
District patrons who have not served on a committee and are interested in seeking information from committees or may have information to offer may contact any committee member. They also have been invited to attend any of the committee meetings. Meeting time for the committees may be obtained from subcommittee officers.

H. P. Bosworth, Jr., is general chairman, assisted by Dr. June Byers and Ward Hammond, vice chairmen.

Gall, Not Courage Needed for Raise

By GEORGE J. MARDER
United Press International WASHINGTON (UPI) — "The compensation should not be set so high that it would attract poor people to seek the salary instead of the office; nor so low that only the rich could afford to serve."

The first Congress established those salary guidelines for itself. It figured that $6 a day, to be paid only for days actually worked, was just the right amount.

The 88th Congress is now trying to get up the courage to raise members salaries to $32,500 a year.

There are those — including some potential recipients—who say it would take gall and not courage to raise congressional salaries by $10,000 a year.

"If we use production as a yardstick," says Rep. J. Arthur Younger, (R-Calif.) "we not only are not entitled to a raise, but should be returning part of what we are now getting."

However, Rep. Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.) proposes that congressional salaries be raised to $35,000 a year in line with the recommendations of an advisory panel named by President Kennedy. Udall argues that members have been "too timid" in raising their own salaries.

Always Squeamish
Congressmen have always been squeamish about boosting their own pay. Some have feared the higher salaries would invite greater competition for the office. Others have been concerned about the impact on the voters: Every time Congress raises its pay some members fail to win re-election.

Some veteran members still remember the bundles for congress when the lawmakers first tried to set up a pension system for members who retire either voluntarily or by the desires of the voters.

The original $6-a-day pay scale lasted for almost 30 years. Then for the next 40 years congress paid itself $8 a day—but still only on working days.

In 1856, the members decided they were worth $3,000 a year each, but with deductions for each day of absence except for illness. That "No work-no pay" policy is still on the congressional books. But it hasn't been enforced since 1894.

A year earlier, in 1893, a bold congress raised its pay by 50 per cent to $7,500 a year. The taxpayers set up a howl. Jittery members, anxious to stay on in Washington, repealed the pay boost just before the elections in 1894.

Congress last gave itself a pay raise in 1955 when it boosted its salary from $15,000 a year to the present $22,500.

The latest move to up congressional pay came about this way:

The last Congress passed a law adopting the principle that pay for government career workers should be "comparable" with those in private industry.

At the same time, the lawmakers realized that this soon would mean some top-level career workers would be making more money than their superiors in the executive department... and in Congress. That, of course, wouldn't do. So Congress asked the President what should be done about it.

The next steps were strictly routine, and expected. The President set up a commission. The commission suggested that executive salaries be raised to a top of $50,000 a year for Cabinet members and $35,000 a year for congressmen.

Too Much
Three weeks ago, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee decided that was too much. It favored a bill which would increase Cabinet salaries to $35,000 a year and congressional salaries to $32,500.

It also would raise the salaries of practically every civilian working for government from the vice president on down. The cost would be about $600 million a year.

A check of the Senate committee indicates members like what they see in the House bill. An attempt will be made to pass it this year.
