Some Problems of Deaf I recently received a letter and a number of informative pamphlets from Miss Marie L. Welsh, secretary of the Friends of the Deaf, 1815 Sixth Ave., Des Moines, Iowa. Miss Virginia Kenny, a teacher of the deaf maintains that it is wrong to try to teach deaf children only lip reading. She and others say it is impossible for even a good lip reader to be sure of everything the other persons says, simply by watching his mouth. She says it is easier for the deaf children to learn sign or finger spelling. They can quickly learn these skills, and she thinks they are happiest when they can use their fingers in talking. She guesses that 98 per cent of deaf persons marry deaf partners, and only two or three per cent learn to read lips well enough to take a comfortable place in our hearing society.

Hence, Dr. Furth urges all parents of deaf children quickly to learn the finger language, and then to talk often to the children so as to give them a store of information. Naturally, the people who believe very strongly in lip-reading alone do not want the child to learn the simple sign language or finger speech because they fear he then will not try to learn the more difficult lip-reading. Several writers have told of adult deaf people who are desperately unhappy because even after years of training they cannot understand speech well enough with their lip-reading, and in their childhood they were denied the right to learn to speak with their fingers with other deaf persons. As a result, they have been terribly shut in and lonely for all of their days.

Lip Reading Tricky Miss Kenny said in her Harper's article that, "Even if the deaf get 100 per cent attention to their teachers' lips all day long they couldn't catch half of what they were talking about. Lip reading is tricky, and requires a fair knowledge of language to begin with. The deaf have always been noted for dwelling in darkness. Many sounds are not even seen on the lips; for example, is, it, a, at, an, ink, key, car, can, cannot, are, get, ant, add, God, hot-dog, hat, cat. And the following words appear identical on the lips: mad, pat, mat, bat, mate, made, pant, bait, Maine, band, pain, paint, pan, painted, bad, man."

This problem needs to be discussed because there are some 200,000 completely deaf people in the United States, and apparently many of them hesitate to use the finger language because they know this is frowned upon by many teachers. Our eyes are vital organs which we often neglect. You cannot afford to ignore any symptoms of eye trouble. See your doctor at the first sign of irregularity in vision. The booklet, "How To Safeguard Your Vision," by Dr. Alvarez will explain to you some of the problems you may encounter with your eyes. To obtain your copy send 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Dept. MMT, Box 957, Des Moines, Iowa 50304.

Dr. Helen Thompson of Yale University stated some years ago that she felt that the deaf child should be given, with finger speech, a large store of information and ideas, before lip reading is even attempted — perhaps not until the child is 9 or 10 years old. Dr. Hans Furth, a psychologist, agrees with this and says that deaf children of deaf parents early begin to talk with their fingers, and as a result, when they go to a school for the deaf, they are immensely better prepared for their studies than are the deaf children who have not had any conversational contacts with the world. Hence, Dr. Furth urges all parents of deaf children quickly to learn the finger language, and then to talk often to the children so as to give them a store of information. Naturally, the people who believe very strongly in lip-reading alone do not want the child to learn the simple sign language or finger speech because they fear he then will not try to learn the more difficult lip-reading.

CAPTURES CATTLE
SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A herd of about 20 cattle broke out of a pen at a packing plant in the Hunter's Point area of San Francisco Monday, but their bid for freedom was thwarted by a blue-clad "cowboy" on a three-legged horse. Motorcycle police officer Howard Myhr pursued the galloping herd through the streets on his three-wheeler and radioed for reinforcements. A posse from the packing plant rushed to the scene and soon had the cows back in the pen.

Bank Messengers Foil Holdup Try

BRISTOL, England (UPI)—Like a pair of razzle-dazzle football players, two bank messengers executed a bit of teamwork Monday that foiled a would-be robber. Pretty 21-year-old Jill Paget and Leonard Norrish, 39, were just going into a bank. The bandit came running toward them. He lunged for Norrish's bag, which contained $1,741. Norrish faked, then lateraled the bag to Miss Paget. In motion, Miss Paget gathered the lateral in as she raced through the bank's door. The robber, discouraged, jumped on a motorcycle and got away. Nature Slipped A Little During Planning Periods We know she didn't, but a casual examination or a meager knowledge of how some living creatures are saddled with odd shaped or peculiarly designed body organs would lead us to believe that Mother Nature slipped a cog or two when she created them. From our human viewpoint we naturally expect to find eyes, ears, nose, legs, arms, flippers or wings in conventional locations. In most creatures this is standard procedure and design. But Mother Nature departed from the usual in designing many of her subjects; in fact she "went all out" in some, and came up with some preposterous designs and unique inventions.

Peculiarly enough, those creatures with the seemingly misplaced organs seem to get along as well as the rest of us who have conventional equipment. In order to better know what is going on in their immediate neighborhood it is necessary for animals to hear, or at least to feel, shock or sound waves. Man, mouse, bird and most of the others have ears located in the heads—the logical place for ears. But the katydid, the noisy insect of the leafy foliage, has ears on its forelegs just above the knees. Mrs. Katydid couldn't even hear it thunder, let alone hear her old man was hiding while he is rasping out his silly accusations.
