

FOUR GENERALS—On November 25, 1863, the four generals who could lead the Northern armies to victory in the Civil War, were fighting on the same field near Chattanooga, Tenn. It was the third and climactic day of the battles of the Chattanooga campaign. The Battle of Missionary Ridge was to be a Confederate rout and fatal to the Confederate cause in the west. The way to Georgia — and to the sea — was now open. The generals who fought that day are (l. to r.): U. S. Grant; William T. Sherman; George R. Thomas; and Philip H. Sheridan. (UPI)

A Confederate Rout

The time was 3:30 p.m., Nov. 25, 1863. The place, Orchard Knob, a rise south of Chattanooga, Tenn., facing Missionary Ridge, a long hill about 200 feet high running northeast and southwest.

Two Union major generals Ulysses S. Grant and George H. Thomas, stood on Orchard Knob that day viewing a panorama of battle that stretched about four miles from Lookout Mountain on their right to Tunnel Hill at the northeast end of the Missionary Ridge to their left.

This was the third and climactic day of the battles of the Chattanooga campaign.

Grant, the commander, had about 60,000 men of three armies strung from Lookout to Tunnel Hill—his old command, the Army of the Tennessee, Thomas' Army of the Cumberland and two corps from the eastern Army of the Potomac. Gen. Braxton Bragg's Confederate army of about 45,000 men was on top of Missionary Ridge, a strong position, rated by some engineers as impregnable.

The four generals who would lead the Northern armies to victory in the Civil War were fighting that day on the same field — Grant, Thomas, William T. Sherman and Philip H. Sheridan.

They never had fought in concert on the same battlefield before and never would again.

Sherman was hammering away at the Confederates on Tunnel Hill. Three times he attacked and three times he was repulsed as his men fought uphill.

On the right at Lookout Mountain, Maj. Gen. Joseph Hooker's men had seized the peak the day before in the "battle above the clouds." As battles went it wasn't a big one and the "clouds" were layers of mist that rose and fell. Only that morning the mist had cleared away as Hooker's men planted the Stars and Stripes on the peak in full view of the cheering Union soldiers in the valley below. Now Hooker was delayed rebuilding a bridge.

Orders Attack
At mid-afternoon Grant ordered Thomas to send his men against Missionary Ridge in a limited attack. They were to capture the Rebel rifle pits at the base and then halt. This might take the pressure off Sherman and give Hooker some breathing time.

Three Union divisions moved to the attack. One was commanded by Sheridan. They took the first Confederate line without difficulty. There they were supposed to stop.

But the second Confederate line halfway up the hill and another at the crest began to pour in a murderous fire.

"The only way to go was up and the Bluecoats without orders started on the run for the summit."

Grant turned to Thomas. "Who ordered those men up the hill?" he asked.

"I don't know," Thomas replied. "I did not."

Gen. Gordon Granger nearby volunteered the information that they advanced without orders.

"All hell can't stop them," he added.

Grant remarked that something would suffer if the impromptu charge failed.

Maj. James A. Connolly, a staff officer who could write as well as fight, was there with the charging Bluecoats.

In a letter to his wife he told about it.

"Our madcaps (capture) the first rifle pits, over these

ALMOST READY FOR SKIERS—Two feet of snow now cover the slopes of the Mt. Ashland Ski Area as workmen rush to complete the lodge in time for this winter's ski season. In this photo, taken in the latter part of the week, the large crane brought in from Eugene may be seen as it placed the fourth of four towers into place atop the lodge. All that remains now to cover the top of the building is the installation of a chimney, expected to be done sometime this week. Ultimately, much of the lodge walls will be in plate glass, but for this winter a temporary wall of plywood and fibreglass insulation is being put on. There will be some plate glass around the grill deck this winter, however. When asked about the latest anticipated opening date, Alex Murphy, Mt. Ashland Corporation manager, said, "The opening date will be announced when the date of completion of the road is imminent." The facilities have been scheduled to be in limited operation this season. The main T-bar cable is now being installed, Murphy said, and foundations for the Pomalift, for beginning skiers, will be installed this week.

Norblad Labels College Building Bill as 'Just Plain Hand-outs'

By YVONNE FRANKLIN
Mail Tribune Washington Bureau
WASHINGTON (Special) — Rep. Walter Norblad blasted the Kennedy Administration's college construction bill this week as mostly "just plain hand-outs."

"This bill provides for the bulk of the money to be simply gifts to the schools and for this reason I voted against it," he said. "The figure is around $250 million in grants, and next year it will be about $300 million per year."

"The amount in loans is $120 million with reasonable interest. I don't see that it is our function to dish out $300 million a year. Loans I don't object to."

Norblad was asked what he thought about funds in the higher education bill which had been written in especially to aid construction for a proposed graduate research center in the Portland area.

"I don't know a thing about it," Norblad said. "I presume it would be a good thing, but all I know is what a recent editorial said about it. I haven't heard from anybody in my district about it."

The three year, $1.2 billion aid to college construction bill has passed both Houses of Congress, survived a Senate-House conference which ironed out major differences, and the final bill was passed in the House two weeks ago.

The bill has not come up for a final vote on the conference report in the Senate because Sen. Wayne Morse will not allow the bill to be voted on until House conferees come to terms on the Vocational Education bill, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield said this week.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell D-N.Y., told a reporter that Morse had informed the House conferees that he (Morse) will not hold another conference on the Vocational Education bill until after Thanksgiving because "he can't get his members together."

Powell said it looked as if this year was becoming a duplication of last year when the higher education bill died at the

Status of Bills Listed at Time Of Session Close

SALEM (UPI)—Here is the status of legislation at the special session which was recessed because of the President's assassination:

— A bill to cut legislators' salaries to $200 a month, and the pay of elected officials 7½ per cent for one year was approved 40-17 by the House, and awaited Senate action.

— The bill to untangle the Boardman space age industrial park project in northeastern Oregon had cleared committee and awaited House action.

Future of the measure was clouded by an attorney general's opinion which declared parts of the proposal were of doubtful constitutionality, and called for an immediate court test of the legislation if it passed.

If the bill clears the House, it must be voted upon in the Senate before the special session can formally adjourn.

All bills dealing with the fiscal crisis resulting from the Oct. 15 tax referendum already have cleared the legislature and have been signed by Gov. Mark Hatfield.

VA Mails Income Questionnaires With Checks

The Veterans Administration will again mail some two million annual income questionnaires with the Nov. 30 pension checks.

These annual income questionnaires go to veterans and dependents of deceased veterans on the VA's nonservice-connected pension rolls and to parents of deceased veterans who are receiving dependency and indemnity compensation.

The questionnaires are punched cards which must be filled out with the required information and returned to the VA before the usual deadline, Jan. 31, or payments will be suspended. If after suspension no questionnaire is submitted, the pensioner will be required to pay back all payments received in 1963.

These forms are machine punched. The VA requests these cards be handled with care so they can be processed through tabulating machines when they are returned. They must not be folded, trimmed or mutilated in any manner.
