Relighting Butt of Cigaret Claimed To Be Cancer Factor

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor
NEW YORK (UPI)—"Dimping" or "decking" may explain the challenging fact that the rate of lung cancer is much higher in Great Britain than in the United States although the cigaret smog rate is about the same.

So believes a team of British medical investigators and statisticians who looked into "dimping" and "decking" among 1,000 Englishmen. To "dimp" or to "deck" is to snuff out a cigaret and save the butt for relighting. The Britishers believed there is very little of that in America.

But among their 1,000 Englishmen there was a lot of it. Among the 667 who had lung disorders other than cancer, 39.1 per cent had the habit, and among the 333 men with lung cancer, 53.2 per cent had it.

same cigaret several times and rarely threw a cigaret away after only one lighting. "Dimping" and "decking" was most closely associated with lung cancer among the men who smoked fewer than 30 cigarets daily. Their lung cancer incidence was statistically comparable to men who smoked two packs or more daily.

The investigators suggested that the lighting of a cigaret was a more meaningful factor in lung cancer statistics than the smoking. Among their "dimpers" and "deckers" it was the number of cigaret lightings which had the closest statistical association with lung cancer.

Another Factor Suggested
The difference in lung cancer incidence among British and American men is challenging to the scientists who associated cigaret smoking with lung cancer because it suggests something else must be involved—since the Britishers and Americans seem equally addicted to cigarets.

Indeed, the British investigators said this was one of "two facts which have not been satisfactorily explained" even though they believed the evidence associating cigaret smoking with lung cancer was "overwhelming." The other unexplained fact, in their thinking, is why the lung cancer rate is higher among city smokers than rural smokers—in both countries.

Their 1,000 men were all patients of a chest clinic. All were over 50 years old, all were cigaret smokers for 20 years or longer. The usual statistical comparisons of number of daily cigarets over the same span of years revealed the usual association, that is, lung cancer patients had smoked more for longer times.

Add Comparisons
To this usual comparison, the investigators added those of "dimping" and "decking." Statistically speaking, the lung cancer patients were more persistent about it and had been for longer. Some relighted the

Taxicab Driver Held For Murder

PORTLAND (UPI)—A 60-year-old taxicab driver was being held on a charge of first degree murder Saturday after the fatal shooting of his wife and her ex-husband here Friday.

Floyd H. Ottman of Portland was arrested about an hour after the bullet-riddled bodies of his wife, Nora Mae, 63, and Donald G. Wymer, also 63, Portland, were found at the Ottmans' apartment.

Wymer was shot seven times and Mrs. Ottman was hit twice. Police said Ottman was carrying a revolver when he was arrested.

The Ottmans' apartment is above a diner which was operated by Mrs. Ottman and Wymer.
