

Newcomer Is X-Ray Technician

Because she has a keen desire to see more of the world, a Swiss X-ray technician is now living in Medford. Theresa Lamprecht arrived here not long ago from Portland and is employed by Drs. Lawson, Markee and Saul at their X-ray clinic.

Miss Lamprecht, who speaks excellent English, received her technical training at University Hospital, Zurich, Switzerland. Last fall she came to Portland, where she has a sister, and took further training at the University of Oregon Medical School.

In addition to English and the Swiss dialect spoken in the area in which she was educated, Miss Lamprecht speaks German and French. She attended Catholic schools in the French part of Switzerland and was graduated from Salve Regina School. Her father, Karl Lamprecht, is an interior decorator in Zurich, and is assisted in his work by his wife. In Zurich, Miss Lamprecht belonged to the X-Ray Society.

Miss Lamprecht said that her parents are encouraging their three daughters to travel to other parts of the world while they are young in the belief that the experiences would be valuable in many ways. She plans to attend Sacred Heart Catholic Church and hopes to become a part of social and cultural activities in this community.

A newcomer to Medford is Theresa Lamprecht, an x-ray technician who came here from Zurich, Switzerland, Miss Lamprecht, trained at University Hospital in Zurich, studied further at the University of Oregon Medical School, Portland, before coming to Medford to join the staff of Drs. Four Royal Babies Are Expected

LONDON (UPI)—Four royal babies are expected early next year—a situation believed to be unique in the annals of British royalty.

Princess Margaret is the latest to announce that she is expecting a child. It was disclosed Monday that she expects her second child in April.

Princess Alexandra, 26, the queen's cousin, is due to have her first baby in January or February.

Queen Elizabeth II, 37, expects her fourth child in February or early March.

Margaret, who is 33, will have her baby in late April, a Kensington Palace announcement said.

The Duchess of Kent, 30, Alexandra's sister-in-law, is due to have her second child in May.

Margaret and her husband, former photographer Lord Snowdon, "are delighted," their press secretary said.

The couple are known to want a daughter as a companion to their son, David, Viscount Linley, who celebrated his second birthday Nov. 3.

Friends said Margaret and her husband delayed the announcement of her pregnancy so as to give the other royal mothers-to-be their full share of the spotlight.

The child will be seventh in line to succession to the throne, after the queen's four children, Princess Margaret herself and her son. The children of Princess Alexandra and the Duchess of Kent will be even further down the line.

LONDON — When Prince Philip proclaimed 1963 as "National Productive Year" the whole royal family pitched in to help. Queen Elizabeth (upper left) expects her fourth child in February or early March; Princess Margaret (upper right) announced yesterday that she expects her second child in late April; Princess Alexandra (lower right) is due to have her first baby in January or February; the Duchess of Kent (lower left) Alexandra's sister-in-law, is due to have her second child in May. This situation is believed to be unique in the annals of British royalty. (UPI)
