

Additional Seals Available in Area

Additional supplies of Christmas seals for use on holiday mail and Christmas packages may be secured by calling at the offices of the Jackson County Tuberculosis and Health Association in the Leverette building on West Main Street, Medford, or by telephoning the office at 772-4818, Mrs. Allen Perry, Christmas seal chairman announced today.

They are also available at the Jackson County Health Department or at the commissary at Camp White, she said.

Although every effort is made to see that each home in Jackson County has a supply of Christmas seals together with an opportunity to help in the fight against tuberculosis and other respiratory diseases, the association feels some have been missed and there are others who want additional seals, she added.

Christmas seals are now being used on gift packages as well as letters since they not only create an attractive and original wrapping, but also help to promote better health, she noted.

This year's seal has been designed to be used with the new Christmas stamp sold by the post office.

Each year a national contest is conducted among artists in the country for the best design for the seal and the winner for 1963 is Miss Judith Plausi of South Bend, Ind. She is a graduate of DePauw University where she studies fine arts and has been a free lance illustrator with a special interest in batik designs on silk. Her winning design was made while she was still in college.

HEARING UNDER WAY — Seaside, Calif., Police Chief Lee Pilcher (right) and Police Sgt. Howard Sager (left) are shown as their grand jury hearing was underway in Salinas, Calif., on possible indictment on felony wiretapping charges. The jury indicted them late Tuesday, and Monterey County

Dist. Atty. Bertram Young said that to his knowledge it was the first time police officers had been charged under the California wiretap law. The hearing was outgrowth of a police investigation of alleged harassing calls received by a Seaside couple. (UPI)

by
A. ROBERT SMITH

WASHINGTON (Special) — Sen. Wayne Morse lost no time declaring his independence after President Lyndon B. Johnson assumed office.

Was this simply the customary ritual of the Senate gaffly for propagating the legend that he fiercely withstands all pressures and yields not even to the president of the United States in voting his conscience? Or was it a premature declaration of hostilities by the Oregon liberal senator who habitually tangled with Johnson when the Texan was running the Senate in much too conservative fashion to suit Wayne Morse?

Months Will Tell
Only the coming months will tell. But the proposed Soviet wheat deal provided an opportunity for Morse to flare up with indignation aimed at the White House before Johnson was in office a week.

It occurred when the Senate killed a bill by Sen. Karl Mundt, R-S.D., which was designed to prevent the Export-Import bank from guaranteeing credits extended to the Soviets by American grain dealers who sell wheat to Russia. The late President Kennedy opposed the Mundt bill, and so did Johnson because Treasury Secretary Douglas Dillon concluded that U.S. commercial banks aren't prepared to grant such credits and that "without Export-Import Bank guarantees, it is very doubtful that the sales can be made."

Morse had testified for the Mundt bill before the Senate Banking Committee. The committee voted 8 to 7 against the bill, with Sen. Maurice Neuberger among those who opposed it. When the Senate voted to kill it, 57 to 35, Morse was absent; but the Congressional Record the next day recorded him as paired against the Mundt bill.

Declaration of Support
Washington newspapers interpreted the vote as a senatorial declaration of support for the new president. But Morse didn't want anyone to suspect he had changed his mind or yielded to White House requests to vote against a bill he had been for. So he rose in high indignation the next day to say:

"I did not ease my vote on the basis of instructions that came to me from the White House, for in my opinion the president was dead wrong in the position he took on the Mundt bill. I do not sit in the Senate as a senator of the president of the United States. I sit in the Senate as a senator of the people of the state of Oregon and it is to them that I owe my trust of following where the facts lead. I owe them and not the president the duty of voting in the Senate in accordance with what I think the best public interest is in connection with any issue and not in accordance with the wish of the president if I consider him to be wrong on any issue."

Morse prefaced this by telling the Senate that one of the president's assistants had telephoned him to say the president "would like to have me vote against the Mundt bill." Morse said he replied to the White House aide that he should tell the president that the Oregon senator "would vote for the Mundt bill because in my judgment it was in the public interest."

Matter of Judgement
"This is a matter of judgement," observed Morse. "I am sure it will not be the last time that I will find myself in disagreement with the president of the United States on the merits of some issue."

Morse explained his position on the bill by predicting that the Soviets may welch on the deal, refusing to pay the agreed costs in full. Morse said "our experience with Russian leaders is perfectly clear."

"I can hear them. They may say that they have found that the wheat is wormy. Or they have found it dirty. Or they have found this and that wrong with the wheat but they have found some excuse for welching on their purchase," he added.

"I see no reason why taxpayers' money from the Export-Import Bank should be set up as a subsidy guarantee to the grain dealers of the U.S., assuring them that they can trade without loss because the taxpayers will guarantee their payments."

Dr. Petersen Author Of Planning Guide

ASHLAND — "A Guide for Planning the Field House as a College or School Physical Education Facility" has been published by the Institute of Field Studies Teachers College, Columbia University, and written by Dr. Alexander Petersen Jr., of Southern Oregon College.

According to Dr. Henry H. Linn, institute editor, the guide is important because it "discusses not only what to do, but also what not to do" in planning the erection of a field house for physical education activities.

and physical education department, has discussed the subject in four major areas: development, planning, design, and the operation and servicing of the unit. The chapters are illustrated with numerous schematic drawings and photographs.
