

IT'S YOUR LAW

Respect for Law Makes Democracy Live

Editor's note: The following article was prepared as a public service by the Oregon State Bar and is not intended to be legal advice. Persons having a legal problem should consult an attorney.

"NO TRESPASSING — HUNTERS BEWARE!"
Any person who enters upon the land of another without authorization is a trespasser. A trespasser may be subjected to a civil liability or criminal penalties or both, depending upon the applicable law.

By common law, a trespasser is liable to the landowner for damage caused to the land or the structures thereon by reason of the trespass. This civil liability for damages applies to any lands of another whether or not they are enclosed or cultivated.

In addition to the civil liability, the Oregon legislature has enacted several statutes imposing criminal penalties by way of either imprisonment or fine or both for trespass on cultivated or enclosed lands.

One statute makes a misdemeanor the mere entry on enclosed lands and refusal to depart upon verbal, written or printed notice of the lawful occupant of such lands. This statute defines enclosed lands as "any barrier such as a river, lake or other obstruction to the passage of stock and also the established and posted boundaries of Indian reservations within the State." It further provides that the printed or written notices must contain the name of the owner or lawful occupant of the lands and must be posted in three conspicuous places on the lands. Posting applies to all persons other than the owners or lawful occupants of lands. Therefore, the landowner may hunt on his land whether posted or not, as can anyone else who obtains permission to do so.

A special statute applicable to hunters further provides that a person hunting with a gun or dog on cultivated or enclosed lands of another without permission can be prosecuted upon the signing of a complaint by the owner, occupant or lessee of such lands.

In addition to the civil liability imposed under common law and the criminal penalties imposed by the statutory law, the Oregon legislature has enacted another statute to discourage trespassing. It provides that a licensed hunter or angler criminally convicted of destroying or damaging anyone's personal or real property shall lose his hunting or fishing license for the remainder of that year and for the succeeding year.
