

GOP Told Lodge Not Eisenhower's Personal Choice

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Key Republicans are being assured that former President Dwight D. Eisenhower was not making Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge his personal presidential choice when he urged him to enter the race for the 1964 GOP nomination.

A spokesman for Eisenhower was said to have contacted Republican leaders this week to emphasize that all the ex-President intended was to broaden the field of prospective GOP presidential candidates.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen, Ill., and Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, Mass., chairman of the Senate GOP Conference, were among those given the assurances.

Lodge, who was Richard M. Nixon's vice presidential running-mate in 1960, has made it clear he has "no intention" at this time of seeking the presidency next year.

Wide Open Contest

But with the shift in Republican prospects arising from President Kennedy's assassination, a wide open nomination contest for the GOP is shaping up and Lodge could be in the scrap.

Dirksen said he received word that Eisenhower's recommendation to Lodge that he return from South Viet Nam to enter the presidential race was "misinterpreted" as indicating that Eisenhower had made Lodge his first choice.

Saltonstall, who served with Lodge in the Senate, has said he favors an unpledged Massachusetts convention delegation. Bay State Republicans it was clear, would favor Lodge if he became a candidate or let it be known he would be a contender. But they would not want to be caught "out on a limb."

Like Listed Prospects

Eisenhower has rattled off lists of party presidential prospects whom he regards as fit for the job on many occasions. This time, a published report of his reference to Lodge left the impression with some that Lodge was getting his personal blessing.

Lodge was a key figure in the Republican drive that put Eisenhower in the 1952 presidential race, and served as his first campaign director.

Lodge lost his Senate seat to the late President Kennedy in that election and was named United Nations ambassador by Eisenhower.

Most Democrats regard the twice-defeated Lodge as a weak prospective opponent for President Johnson next year. The feeling is shared by many Republicans.

acted on their bills with little delay.

The appropriation bills for the Labor and the Health, Education and Welfare Departments and for the Treasury and the Post Office Departments were handled by Senate subcommittees chaired by Lister Hill, D-Ala., and A. Willis Robertson, D-Va., respectively. The House Treasury-Post Office Appropriations Subcommittee is headed by Rep. J. Vaughan Gary, D-Va. Little delay was experienced with either bill.

Other senators came to McClellan's defense. Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said he was "quite sure" that no bill was being delayed "because of dilatory tactics."

President Kennedy, as his last news conference Nov. 24, said that delay in all congressional activities because of the civil rights controversy "has had an effect upon the passage of appropriations bills. There is not any question."

Southern Chairmen — Southerners are in key positions to delay appropriations, but evidence that they have done so is not conclusive.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland, D-Fla., heads the Senate subcommittee where the Agriculture appropriations bill was delayed. The House also moved slowly to agree to a conference on the bill to settle differing provisions. The chairman of the House conferees is Rep. Jamie L. Whitten, D-Miss.

But observers also noted that several controversial items in the bill, such as a provision covering Rural Electrification Administration loans, may have delayed action both in the Senate Committee and in maneuvering for a conference.

Richard Russell, D-Ga., chief strategist for the Southern bloc in its efforts to defeat the civil rights bill, is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, in which delay occurred on the military construction authorization bill.

But a committee staff member said the delay was caused by a large amount of work faced by the committee this year, including the military pay and draft expansion bills and "an unusually large number of other bills."

On the other hand, Russell is chairman of the Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. The defense bill, although delayed somewhat in the Senate, was given final Congressional approval on Oct. 8.

Major's Warrant Paid Despite Offer To Return

NOVATO, Calif. (UPI) — That $15 parking warrant of Air Force Major Alan W. Sanders has been paid and acting Police Chief Robert J. Di Grazia admitted today that sometimes the life of a law enforcement officer can be a trying one.

Di Grazia has been bombarded with letters and telegrams since last week, when he accused Sanders of action "unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" for the major's reaction to a $15 warrant which resulted from an unpaid $2 parking fine.

Sanders—who had been transferred to Viet Nam — wrote a letter to the acting chief saying he would welcome the arrest, preferably in Novato, and would cooperate fully in any efforts to get him out of the Far East and back to California.

Given to Air

Di Grazia, slightly miffed by Sanders' action, turned a copy of the citation and a record of the action over to the Air Force at Hamilton Air Force Base.

But Di Grazia admitted today that he may have acted in haste. He said the letters and telegrams which have flooded his office were 20 to 1 against him.

And Di Grazia said Sanders' fine had been paid by a generous citizen in Redwood City, Calif., who forwarded a letter and a $15 cashier's check.

He said the cashier's check was applied to the fine because there was no return address on the envelope and no indication as to who had purchased the check.

Di Grazia said his office also received a check from a man in Arkansas, but it was being returned.

Pilot Lands With Jammed Wheel

FORT WORTH (UPI) — A Continental Airlines Viscount airliner with 38 persons aboard made an emergency landing at Carswell Air Force Base today after a nosewheel jammed.

The wheel came down just as the pilot brought the plane in and the landing was normal.

Emergency trucks lined the runway as the turbo-prop plane came in under murky skies. All passengers had been moved to the rear of the plane.

The plane was en route from Midland, Tex., to Dallas with 34 passengers and four crewmen.

The plane circled Dallas' Love Field while the crew took emergency measures failed, pilot Fred White, a veteran with 16 years service, veered off to Carswell Air Force Base where runways are longer.

The plane had less than 30 minutes of fuel left when it swung toward Carswell, 30 miles from Love Field.

Vessel Nudges Willamette Bridge

PORTLAND (UPI) — A 468-foot ship, the Mormacram, nudged the Willamette River bridge of the Spokane, Portland and Seattle Railway Thursday night.

Neither the ship nor the bridge was damaged. The incident occurred when the bridge closed as the ship approached.

Abdominal Pain Due to Mental Disturbances

Few lay people realize how often an abdominal pain is a sign of mental trouble, perhaps a depression, or great anxiety over something, such as the distressing behavior of an alcoholic husband, or a delinquent boy.

When a medical friend asks me how it happens that I, who for many years, was a stomach and bowel specialist, wound up interested mainly in neuroses and mild psychoses, my answer is that so large a percentage of the people whom I saw complaining of indigestion, abdominal pain or abdominal bloating or discomfort, had nothing demonstrably wrong in their abdomens: the trouble was all up in their brain. Sometimes the cause was a mental depression, and the day this was cleared up the pain went.

I am reminded of all this as I read in a recent number of the JAMA an excellent article by Dr. Henry M. Fox of Boston, a Harvard psychiatrist. He tells how, at last, in the great Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston, the internists and the psychiatrists have learned to work together. As a result many of the patients with an abdominal pain, who were a complete puzzle to the stomach specialists, were quickly shown by a psychiatrist to have some mild psychosis, or severe neurosis, or some anxiety or unhappiness.

Often, when the psychiatrist talked this over with the patient, or just got him or her to confess it, the symptom almost disappeared.

To show what happens: Dr. Fox tells of an internist who had a woman patient who kept complaining of an abdominal pain for which no cause could be found. Fortunately, one of the young house officers suggested that she be seen by a psychiatrist. Within 15 minutes the mental expert found that the woman, came from an alcoholic family and was mildly alcoholic herself.

She had divorced one alcoholic husband and then married a second one; and now she was distressed because her two daughters had recently left home. She was in such a deep depression she had suicidal ideas. As so commonly happens when a patient is dealing with a stomach specialist, this woman, while in the gastroenterologic division, had made no mention of her mental troubles.

Another patient, a 72-year-old woman, had been coming into the out-patient department for over a year, complaining of headaches, and "shakiness" in her legs. Careful examinations had failed to show any local cause.

When the psychiatrist was called, he quickly noticed that she was so scatter-brained that it was almost impossible to get any real information out of her. Finally, he learned that she was much upset because her children had moved away; she had retired from her job; and, as a result, she was overwhelmed with a sense of uselessness and isolation and loneliness. Again, the mere fact of confession, and of talking this out with the psychiatrist almost cured her.

Another woman had had several complaints that suggested serious disease and had had numerous operations, which evidently hadn't cured her. When interviewed by a psychiatrist, she was found to be paranoid; she was suspicious of her doctors, and maintained that they were not telling her the truth, which she said was that she had a cancer. The psychiatrist found that the woman's internist, not knowing how first to recognize and then to handle a somewhat psychotic woman, had lost his temper with her, and had thereby lost any chance he might have had of helping her. The psychiatrist won her friendship and confidence and then was able to calm her fears.

As I read this interesting paper there came to my mind the experience I had in 1913 with a middle-aged, widowed school teacher whom I saw with a surgeon who said that he had seen her in three attacks of such severe abdominal pain that each time he had opened her up, fully expecting to find an intestinal obstruction. Each time he had found nothing wrong. Now, she was in another attack of terrible pain, but did not want a fourth operation. When I could not get her to tell me what had gone wrong in her life on the days when she had the pain, I got hold of her husband, and learned that each time she had had the pain, her good-for-nothing son had been jailed for passing bad checks. After that she had no more operations.

A common cause of repeated attacks of severe abdominal pain, for which a surgeon cannot find any local disease is migraine, and usually migraine complicated and made severe by a second inheritance. For instance: a woman I know got migraine from her mother and her father. Her father, a "wild" alcoholic father, in many cases, one can make the diagnosis in a moment by learning that the attacks all started with pain over one eye.
