Many Origins Given For Plum Pudding

BOSTON, Mass. (UPI)—Plum pudding, a standby of holiday menus, shows up in assorted books as having assorted origins.

One commercial producer of the pudding cited one book on "Old English Customs" by a man named Ditchfield, who said that plum pudding "is not older than the early years of the 18th century." It was a "House of Hanover" or active settlement dish consisting of a porridge or pottage, and not a pudding, made up of very strong broth of shin of beef.

"Encyclopedia of Food" says the earliest record of plum pudding came from the memoirs of a Frenchman who took a voyage on a British ship in 1658. The chef combined flour, lard, currants, salt and pepper, in a napkin and cooked the "porridge" in bouillon which the Frenchman called "not absolutely bad."

The first mention of "plum pudding" per se, was given in a 1791 book of a Mrs. Fraser who was called the "sole teacher of the art of cookery" in Edinburgh, Scotland. She entitled her raisin-like dessert "plum pudding," and it may have been because of the swelling of the raisins that the dish got its name. "Plum" evidently meant to "rise" or "swell" in those days, in that area.

At the reception Mrs. Jerry Smith, sister-in-law of the bride, cut and served the cake, and Mrs. Jerry Brannon poured coffee. Mrs. Ray Hogue presided at the punch bowl.
