Staubach UPI Player Of Year

NEW YORK (UPI)—Midshipman Roger Staubach, the most celebrated sailor since John Paul Jones, has been named the college football player of the year by the United Press International.

McLoughlin Mat Victor

McLoughlin Junior High wrestlers defeated Lincoln Savage 34-18 in a Monday match. Mac had a 13-0 exhibition margin.

Berry Winds Up 6th in Offense

NEW YORK (UPI)—Bob Berry, Oregon's sharp junior quarterback, wound up sixth nationally in total offense among major college football players, the NCAA said today.

Big Sky Has Not Invited PSC To Join

By GORDON RICE United Press International PORTLAND (UPI)—Portland State College is looking for information about other athletic conferences, but it has not asked nor been invited to join the Big Sky circuit, President Branford Miller said Tuesday.

It was another in a long line of steady laurels for the personable 21-year-old Navy quarterback, who also accumulated such other awards as the Heisman Trophy and Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Trophy among many others.

Staubach's designation as player of the year came by landslide proportions as he polled 210 votes out of a possible 219 among the nation's sportswriters and sportscasters who took part in the balloting.

There was no one even remotely close to six-foot-two, 190-pound Jolly Roger, of whom his coach, Wayne Hardin says, "he's the greatest football player I've ever seen."

Fanfare

By DICK JEWETT Mail Tribune Sports Editor

With basketball season barely underway, a couple of rule changes already have come under attack of some sports writers. We've sort of reserved judgment, believing it a bit early to make assessment.

One of the rules provides that the official shall hand the ball to the thrower for all throws except those made from outside the end line following a score.

PASERO SAYS Right now, we sort of go along with George Pasero, sports editor of the Oregon Journal. In his Tuesday column he said:

"Don't believe the charge that basketball's rulemakers have ruined the game by stopping the clock anytime the whistle blows, which means out-of-bounds, etc., when valuable seconds were lost retrieving the ball heretofore.

Another rule change deletes the coverage which permitted an official to take time-out for a slight delay such as for retying a shoelace or replace or secure a shoe. Time-out now can be granted when the team of the player involved is entitled to one and the time-out must be charged to the team.

Also deleted is the rule which described the "force-out." Coverage now provides that when a player in control of the ball goes out of bounds at the same time there is contact with an opponent, the official must decide whether a foul or violation occurred.

An added note to one rule lists technical foul infractions, having more than 11-e squad members participating simultaneously, participating after being disqualified and participating after changing a number without reporting it to the scorers and an official. These are to be penalized if discovered during the time a provision is being violated.

Fast breaks are made possible mostly by the good referee clearing the ball in a hurry. As an Elgin Baylor and Gus Johnson did so well while scurrying around our local courts. Or the "break" comes on a steal. A good play, breaking a man loose, will seem like a "fast break" too.

"What the new rule has done is provide a twofold achievement, we believe. It's lengthened the games maybe 15 minutes and that's OK with us. Under the old rules some games would be over in an hour and one half. That's pretty short entertainment for anyone "making a night of going to a game."

The other result is positive too. It seems the team trailing in the final minutes has a better chance to catch up. That's an improvement because the stall has never been popular with fans, except when the home team is ahead. Basketball should not be one kind of a game for 36 minutes, a different kind for 4.

NOT APPRECIABLY LONGER Mail Tribune photographer Larry Holman has tape-recorded games for the past couple of years as a hobby, connecting the recorder to the radio before leaving to take in a game first hand. He has taped the four Medford games so far this season and the tapes indicate these contests not appreciably longer than those he recorded last season.

BUG IN BONNET

We were going to comment along Pasero's line of "more for your money" with the hope that the longer game ideas wouldn't put a bug in somebody's bonnet to raise prices.
