

Mrs. Kennedy, Children Arrive In Palm Beach

PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI)—The widow of President John F. Kennedy and her two young children arrived at the scene of some of the family's happiest times Wednesday night for a "quiet and sad" Christmas.

Fla. c. k. Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, Caroline, 6, and John Jr., 3, flew to this winter resort from Washington on an Air Force jet. They were accompanied by Princess Lee Radziwill, Mrs. Kennedy's sister, and several Secret Servicemen.

The family stepped from the plane into a waiting car and went directly from the West Palm Beach airport to the walled-in, seaside mansion of C. Michael Paul, leased last year by the Kennedys.

Sharp Contrast

The arrival was in sharp contrast to last year's gathering of the Kennedys here for the Christmas holidays. On that occasion, Mrs. Kennedy and the children met the President on his return from a conference in Nassau with Harold Macmillan who at that time was British foreign minister.

Hundreds of spectators had watched as Kennedy greeted his wife, scooped Caroline and John Jr. into his arms and walked happily to a big, white convertible which Caroline, to the delight of the crowd, helped her father steer out of the airport.

Quiet, Sad Day

The return of the slain President's family was their first since a reunion of the Kennedy clan here last Easter.

"Christmas will be a quiet and sad day for the rest of us, but for the children's sake, Santa Claus will come," said a family spokesman.

Miss Ann Gargan, niece of former ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, the late President's father, said the children would open their presents at the Paul home Christmas morning and then go to their grandfather's house for a private Mass and dinner.

The elder Kennedy's ocean-side villa is about a mile south of the Paul mansion where the late President and his family relaxed in the sun in periodic escapes from Washington winters.
