

Kidney Transplant Patient Retained

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A 44-year-old dock worker, alive because Tulane University doctors transplanted the kidneys of a chimpanzee into his body, spent Christmas day in a hospital.

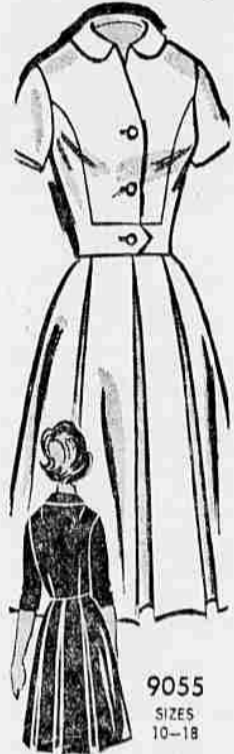

The same doctors who saved Jefferson Davis' life with the transplant kept him in the hospital today fearing inclement weather might give him a cold, or perhaps pneumonia, if he were to leave.

Davis was to have been released for Christmas.

He went home for two days last week after spending more than a year in hospitals and promptly developed a head cold.

Doctors explained drugs used to prevent Davis' body from rejecting the foreign kidneys had lowered his resistance to infection.
