Tax Vote, Special Election Top 1963 Oregon News Stories

PORTLAND (UPI) —Oregon's 1963 legislature went 141 days in the longest regular session in the state's history.

It finally passed a $48 million income tax increase bill and a $12 million one-shot measure to raise $60 million needed for a $404 million general fund budget.

But the taxpayers said no—loudly.

An hour after the polls closed Oct. 15 Gov. Mark Hatfield admitted the tax bill had been defeated. The final count was by a 3½ to 1 margin.

That tax election and the resulting special legislative session ranked as Oregon's top news story of 1963, according to balloting by United Press International editors. The special session passed no new taxes, although it did again approve the one-shot withholding tax bill. And it gave Hatfield the powers he asked to trim the budget.

Money figured, also, in the state's number two news story, the long summer lumber strike. The strike - lockout started June 5 and spread throughout the Douglas Fir region. At one time an estimated 29,000 workers were idled. It began against two members of the Big Six employer group and the four others shut down. Settlement came in mid-August, generally along lines of a 30½ cent hourly wage hike spread over three years.

Stories Listed

Here is how the editors rated the top 10 stories for the state this year.

1. Tax election and special session.
2. Lumber strike.
3. Seaside riots for second year in a row.
4. The regular, record- long legislative session.
5. Civil defense cutbacks.
6. Boardman.
7. The state's record highway death toll.
8. Death penalty vote set for next year and appeals of condemned slayers Jeannace Freeman and Larry Shipley.
9. October Eugene Republican conference.
10. President Kennedy's visit to Tongue Point.

The civil defense, Boardman and death penalty stories had legislative overtones. Lawmakers cut civil defense from an 18 to a 3-member agency, while Portland was junking its CD agency. The special session, after a political fight, approved legislation to clear up title to some of the land in the Boardman area and turned it over to the State Veterans Affairs department. On Thursday of this week it was announced Boeing Co., Seattle, has activated its lease of the planned 100,000-acre industrial park.

The lawmakers agreed to give voters a chance next November to say if they want to abolish the death penalty. Miss Freeman, who would be the first woman executed in Oregon, and Shipley, meanwhile, continue their appeals. Two other persons also are on death row in Salem.

Young people at Seaside rioted over the Labor Day weekend for the second year in a row. This story was barely nosed out for number two by the lumber strike.

Highway Toll Huge

The state had a record number of highway deaths — with the official count standing at 545 as of Dec. 26. The old record was 492 in 1959. The victims included State Rep. W. O. Kelsay, D-Roseburg; promising fighter Bobby Horn and Oregonian entertainment editor Bob Walters.

A preview of the 1964 presidential primary was seen at the Western Republican Conference in Eugene this fall when Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York now a declared candidate, and Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, considered a front runner for the GOP nomination appeared separately on the same day.

The late President John F. Kennedy paid a brief visit to Oregon in September, announcing at Astoria that the old Tongue Point Navy station would be put to use. He had planned to visit Portland, too, but threatened picketing by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People led him to cancel his trip here.

Stories which also received strong voting included, in order: Problems of higher education; racial problems in Portland; the projected Oregon Dunes seashore; Portland's new baby elephants; the slaying of cattle heiress Irene Davis in Portland; the proposed power intertie with California; threats to Gov. Hatfield; continued salvage of blowdown timber from the 1962 October storm without a feared forest fire loss; the mail fraud and conspiracy trial resulting from sale of arid lands in Harney county, and Hatfield's firing of industrial accident commissioners Emily Logan and Sidney Lewis.

Salem Boasts Program For Many Citizens

The city supplies one-half of the budget; the school district, the other half. Both provide facilities such as gymnasium, classrooms and swimming pools.

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

A PENNSYLVANIA legislator, with time hanging heavy on his hands in Harrisburg one evening, came upon a disintegrating, dog-eared pamphlet published just after the turn of the century that set him up for hours. It was published by a no-doubt worthy outfit that called itself the Farmers' Anti-Automobile Society, and recommended several rules that motorists on rural roads would do well to follow.

One rule suggested that a car owner, propelling his vehicle after dark, should stop every mile, send up a warning rocket, and then wait for ten minutes to make certain that the road ahead was clear before advancing.

"If a horse is unwilling to pass an automobile," the Society declared on another page, "the driver should take the machine apart as rapidly as possible and conceal the parts in the bushes."

(Just as I finished getting this anecdote down on paper, Author Truman Capote came tootling up to our house in a Jaguar geared to do 150 miles an hour. What a 60 years these have been!)

BUDGET ESTIMATES NEVER ACCURATE

President Johnson will submit a budget in the $100 billion range — plus or minus a bit — next month and he'll astound the nation by the size of the spending reductions he has made in the few weeks he has been in office. But I hereby make a large-scale bet that neither his estimate for spending nor for income nor for the deficit will turn out to be accurate.

Johnson really has been fighting to push the budget below the historic milestone of $100 billion. From the day he assumed the Presidency, he has been making daily headlines with his stern orders for budget cuts, his explanations of the difficulties involved in putting a lid on government expenditures. Not ever has a President talked so much in public about a budget he is still to introduce as Lyndon Johnson has since he entered the White House.

All of this is an exceedingly impressive buildup for the big budget story of January. Even assuming the budget is some hundred millions above $100 billion, Congress knows Johnson tried and in return, passage within the next 60 to 90 days of the massive tax reduction bill is a virtual certainty.

But as the 1965 fiscal year (to begin July 1) rolls on, Johnson's budget will be amended and re-amended. It would be remarkable if any of the key figures he submits in January are on target when the 1965 year ends 18 months from now.

I'm not nearly as far out on a limb nor as cynical as these flat statements about Johnson's estimates might suggest. In fact, the record of just the past 10 budget years indicates I'm on sound ground.

Not once have the original spending-income-surplus or deficit estimates made by the Presidents during these 10 years — Eisenhower, Truman, Kennedy — turned out accurate.

In six of the 10 years, the original spending figure became bigger, in four it became lower.

In six of the 10 years, the original income figure became lower, in four it became bigger.

In five of the 10 years, an original forecast of a budget surplus turned out to be a deficit and in the memorable Eisenhower year of 1959, the initial estimate of a $500 million surplus became an all-time peacetime record deficit of $12.4 billion. In other years deficits or surpluses were bigger or smaller than predicted, and in one year a projected deficit became a modest surplus.

Here's the record against which to weigh the Johnson estimates you'll read next month. (In billions of dollars.)

	Spending		Income		Surp. or Def.
Year	Orig. Est.	Fact	Orig. Est.	Fact	Orig. Est.	Fact
1955	65.6	64.4	62.7	60.2	—2.9	—4.2
1956	62.4	66.2	60.0	67.9	—2.4	+1.6
1957	65.9	69.0	66.3	70.6	+0.4	+1.6
1958	71.8	71.4	73.6	68.6	+1.8	—2.8
1959	73.9	80.3	74.4	67.9	+0.5	—12.4
1960	77.0	76.5	77.1	77.8	+0.1	+1.2
1961	79.8	81.5	84.0	77.7	+4.2	—3.9
1962	80.9	87.8	82.3	81.4	+1.5	—6.4
1963	92.5	92.6	93.0	86.4	+0.5	—6.5
1964	98.8	97.8	86.9	88.8	—11.9	—9.0
1965	100 + or — ?		92.5 + or — ?		—9.0 + or — ?

This is the latest estimate of the way the 1964 budget will turn out. The year doesn't end until June 30, 1964.

As this record shows, I'm not much out on a limb and I'm not cynical in my comments about the first Johnson budget.

Any more guesses? Yes. I think spending will turn out higher than Johnson's January estimate.

The guess on the extent to which the income-deficit projections will change should be withheld until after we see how much the 1964 tax cut spurs the economy and adds to jobs, paychecks, profits.

But my key point remains: January 1964's budget estimates will not be July 1965's budget facts.

Small Worlds Around Us

By LYNN M. WATKINS

(Register and Tribune) Syndicate 1963)

It Takes Time, But Nature Slowly Makes Changes

It took many millions of years for most present-day species of animals to crawl up out of the mud of prehistoric times into the sunlight, with dry land under their feet. Once on the solid earth many of these animal-species developed into something very different than was their original structure, with very different habits, and even a change of body organs.

Of course, the change was painfully slow. There were no eyes to see. The new environment meant different adaptation; some of the animals accomplished a great deal.

There are some animal species that are still crawling, hovering on the borderline between aquatic and terrestrial, not seeming to know just which way to go, balanced as it were, on the mighty teeterboard of biological development.

Some common creatures alive today must spend the early part of their lives in water. They are purely aquatic for a time, then a bodily change occurs and they crawl ashore, or take to the air on fluttering wings. Some of these will live out the remainder of their lives on dry land, but must return to the water to deposit their eggs. Some, like the giant sea turtle, reverse the order and live all their lives in the sea, returning briefly to land to lay their eggs.

Mysterious Future

No one can say just what the future holds for many of these creatures, or what ultimate form they will eventually follow. No one can say, or even completely understand just what nature has in mind for any species, even man himself; he too, over eons of time, may change.

Nature is certainly experimenting, developing new techniques and methods. Some bodily organs will probably be discarded entirely, other glands and organs may be developed to meet the conditions of a changed environment. Always the change is so slight, and extended over such great lengths of time, the mind cannot comprehend the change. Nature of course is in no hurry, she has all the time in the world.

Theory Of Change

If there is any truth to the theory of bodily change to meet changing conditions, as has been noticed countless times in the gradual evolution of one species of animal into something a little more advanced, then man himself, if he lasts that long, will have developed a new sort of hinge in his right arm. It may be a two-way hinge, with a much more flexible shoulder joint, making it easier for him to pat himself on the back. Right now he does it by personal thinking, or talking, with maybe a little outside help from an appreciative friend.

Already man's ego has outgrown his stature, and it's still growing. But nature alone has the primal force needed to create life. Nature can even regenerate parts of some living creatures; new legs, new tails, even some new body organs can be grown. Too, this primal force brings together a group of cells, and becomes a living thing. All of which is still, and probably will be for a long time, a little too complex to understand.

Corbett Delays Revealing Plans

PORTLAND (UPI) — State Sen. Alfred Corbett, D-Portland, said Thursday he would not formally announce his 1964 election plans until "sometime next year."

He said, "I have known for several months what I plan to do. My decision will not be affected by the announcements of others."

There has been speculation for several months that Corbett would be a Democratic candidate for Secretary of State.

Parents Could Be Leading Children To Drinking Habit

By DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist

Some parents of teen-age children may be encouraging the drinking of alcoholic beverages. Permitting a drink with dinner or allowing a taste of the parent's drink can lead to problems.

Teen-age drinking brings many problems — automobile accidents, vandalism, fighting, sexual promiscuity, etc.

A child should not drink alcoholic beverages, and there should be no exceptions regardless of social pressures. The parent who permits his child to drink liquor is not setting proper standards, and the child's associates are being exposed to unfair pressures.

Extension of Problem

An extension of this problem can be the teen-age party. Liquor should not be served in any form. It is the responsibility of the parents, in whose home the party is held, to supply proper supervision.

There is no harm in a parent making a telephone call to find out what is being planned at a party to which his child has been invited. Some parents hesitate to do this because they feel it may be embarrassing. It should never be embarrassing to show an interest in a child's welfare. The other parents probably would like to know the same things when the situation is reversed.

Teen-agers should have definite rules prohibiting the drinking of alcoholic beverages. Attendance at drinking parties should be avoided.

A child who drinks at home could hardly be expected to refrain outside the home.

Q: My fifteen-year-old daughter attended a party at a friend's home. I had checked and found that the parents would be home and intended to act as chaperones. My daughter arrived home visibly upset. It seems that liquor was available and she had been embarrassed several times because she would not take a drink. The chaperones were not only aware of the liquor but actually helped to serve it. I am not sure what to do. Could you make some suggestions?

A: My first thought is that your daughter should be complimented on doing what she knew was right regardless of the social pressures. This is especially difficult for teen-agers. The first step is to praise her and give her the support necessary to continue this admirable behavior.

Was this an appropriate party for your daughter? How old were the other members? I suggest that you investigate the circumstances by contacting these parents. A calm discussion may solve your problem.

Obviously, continued good judgment on your part in guiding your daughter will help her to meet these kinds of difficult problems which do occur.

Boardman Giveaway Charges Refuted

PENDLETON (UPI)—Charges of giveaway in the lease of the Boardman park site to Boeing Co. of Seattle were refuted here Thursday by William H. Belt of Hermiston, president of the Space Age Industrial Park Association.

Belt said such allegations are as empty and lacking in substance as the present state of the land itself.

He described the Boardman acreage as "sub-marginal land of shallow light soil and bedrock only a few feet from the surface."

He said detractors of the lease had typified the arid land as "another Yakima Valley" in its agricultural potential.

The site is not now farmed, has never been farmed and in all probability would never be farmed, Belt added.

Ashland Man Gets Log Hauling Rights

SALEM — James P. Vanderlip, Ashland logging contractor, has won approval by the state public utility commissioner of a partial transfer of Oregon log hauling rights held by Sally E. Jolliffe of Palo Alto, Calif.

The permit transfer, effective Jan. 3, will allow Vanderlip to transport logs, poles or piling within Deschutes, Douglas, Jackson, Josephine, Klamath, Lake and Lane Counties.

The Jolliffe permit also included Curry County, but Commissioner Jonel C. Hill deleted this area when no evidence of need for it was shown by Vanderlip at a hearing in Medford recently.

At the hearing, Vanderlip testified that he was unable to secure enough truckers to handle his production.

"We have 1,000,000 feet lying in the woods that we can't move for lack of trucks," Vanderlip said.

Clyde W. Lees, manager for the Kogap Manufacturing Co., Medford, Vanderlip's main shipper, testified in his behalf.

GOTEMBA LEPER COLONY, Japan (UPI) — Crewmen of the U.S. 7th Fleet general stores ship Pollux returned to their ship today after bringing Christmas to this isolated leper colony on the slopes of Mt. Fuji.

The sailors painted a chapel and other buildings, built a pig pen, replaced broken windows, laid drainpipes and built a basketball and volleyball court. Then they held a Christmas party, passing out gifts including a $500 cash donation to the colony.

Vale Bank Manager Slates Retirement

VALE, Ore. (UPI) — D. E. Masterson, manager of the Vale branch of the U. S. National Bank of Portland since 1947, retires this month.

Masterson began his banking career as an assistant cashier of the first bank of Juntura in 1919.

Kennedy Brothers On Winter Holiday

ASPEN, Colo. (UPI)— The late President Kennedy's two brothers set out for Aspen's famed ski slopes today to begin a week-long winter holiday.

Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., arrived in Aspen Thursday on a chartered airplane flight from Denver. The senator brought his wife, Joan, with him and the attorney general was accompanied by his wife, Ethel, four of their children, Kathleen, 11; Joe, 10; Bobby, 9 and David, 8, and a friend of Kathleen's, Marty Little.

COMMENT DECLINED

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (UPI) — The North American Air Defense Command (NORAD) has declined to comment on a report that the Soviet Union might have fired a missile down the Pacific range over Hawaii Christmas Eve.

Truman Vetoes Two Vice Presidents

NEW YORK (UPI) —Former President Harry S. Truman today turned thumbs down on a proposal by Sen. Kenneth Keating, R-N.Y. that the Constitution be revised to provide for two vice presidents.

"It's a silly program, that's all it is," Truman said during his early morning walk near the Manhattan hotel where he has been staying for a holiday visit with his daughter and grandchildren.

"The present setup is good enough," Truman said.

Truman ridiculed criticism of President Johnson by Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., who said Thursday that the Chief Executive had used "arm twisting" tactics to get congressional support for the foreign aid bill.
