

City of Intellect Is Goal of UC's President Kerr

By MARK L. SCHNEIDER
BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — You can learn how to make wine at the University of California or, if you can squeeze into his classroom, you can learn physics from Dr. Edward Teller, father of the H-bomb. A thousand students stood in line all night once for a chance to enroll the next morning in his survey course.

The University of California is big—the nation's largest university—and it is getting bigger. It is scattered over seven major campuses and 70 locations all told and has 57,000 full-time students — more students than Wheeling, W. Va., has people.

The university's enrollment has doubled since 1953 and will double again by the early 1970s.

The driving force behind UC is Dr. Clark Kerr, its president, a 52-year-old former Pennsylvania farm boy. Despite UC's growth and progress, Kerr is not satisfied.

The universities of America, he says, have a duty for national service. They must link arms with industry to create an "ideopolis."

They must become the "prime instrument of national purpose."

"City of Intellect"

This is Kerr's goal—a "city of intellect" — a useful city.

Half of the University of California's $47 million income comes from federal grants and contracts. The university undertook 2,707 research projects last year for 90 federal, state and municipal agencies.

It is no coincidence that California defense industries received 41 per cent of the Defense Department's $12.3 billion spent for research, development, testing and evaluation. Many of them are here because UC is here.

The quality of the faculty may help explain this.

The faculty has 12 Nobel Prize winners — more than all of Russia. They include the recently named Mrs. Maria Goeppert Mayer, professor of physics at the San Diego campus, the first woman to be selected for the physics prize since Marie Curie.

The number of faculty members in the National Academy of Science — considered a yardstick of a faculty's scientific status — moved ahead of Harvard in 1960 to lead the nation.

Government Workers

One of four of the university's 5,000 faculty members spends some of his time working for government agencies and other public organizations.

A number of farming and harvesting devices have been developed at UC's Davis campus, considered one of the world's leading agricultural and research centers.

Davis researchers developed an elongated tomato that can be picked mechanically. A new slicing device promises canned sliced tomatoes soon.

Meanwhile, UC is breaking ground — and tradition — for two new campuses at Irvine and Santa Cruz.

The Santa Cruz campus is a revolutionary concept even for the University of California. To insure top priority concern for undergraduates, who sometimes become the forgotten men at big universities, an Oxford-type residential college is under construction. Students will live within the colleges where they attend classes.

Other major expansion is under way at San Diego, where the campus was founded in 1912 as the Scripps Institution of Biological Research. It has developed a school of oceanography and instituted a school of science and engineering.

Additions are going up or are planned at Berkeley, the original UC campus founded in 1868; the San Francisco Medical Center; Los Angeles, Davis, Riverside and Santa Barbara.

Growth — both physical and intellectual — are in store at UC.

Apartment House Under Construction

Construction started recently on the Cottage House, a $100,000 apartment building located on Cottage Street owned by Andrew G. Fenney, 3225 Forest St., proprietor of the Brave Bull restaurant.

The Cottage House will include 18 units ranging in price from $107.50 and $127 to the deluxe unit for $175.

Each unit will be soundproof, will have wall-to-wall carpeting, will have some appliances, and will have a covered garage, Fenney said. A swimming pool, 32 by 15 feet, also will be available to tenants.

The apartment is expected to be ready for occupancy by April, 1964, he said.

Fenney was involved in real estate and construction in California before he moved to the Medford area.
