The guests would have arrived on foot or by wagon and buggy instead of by automobile, the women's skirts would brush the floor instead of barely covering the knees and they would have danced the polka or Virginia reel to fiddle music instead of the twist or cha-cha to an orchestra, records or radio. However, the guests who attended the Holiday Ball almost a century ago for which this old invitation was written, would doubtless have enjoyed themselves as much as the guests at parties given this month in the Rogue Valley. The invitation is the property of C. G. Peebler who found it in the attic of the Colver building in Phoenix where the ball was held and in which the Peeblers now operate an antique store and make their home. Found in 1927, the hand-written invitation was already a valuable memento of times gone by, and Mr. Peebler put it in a frame for safe-keeping. Samuel Colver erected the building in 1854, and it was first used by the Indian agent. Later it was the residence of the Colver family. The names of the "managers" are still known in the valley and Mrs. Alton Anderson, Medford, the former Agnes Colver, is a descendant of Samuel Colver.

Here's How To Keep On List

By Gay Pauley

NEW YORK (UPI)—Take note of a few New Year's resolutions in fashion and you might find yourself on one of those best-dressed lists in 1964.

Culled from all of the advice so freely given through the last year, from assorted authorities, this column has selected several which should help you arrive—at least among your family and friends, if not on that nationally publicized roster of elegants.

—Resolve to keep, and use, a good clothes brush at both home and office.

—Resolve not to pull at your girdle in public.

—Resolve to keep purse from becoming a catch-all in which paper clips, gummed labels, compact, check stubs, hair spray, pencils, memos to yourself, Kleenex, a couple of safety pins, key chain, trading stamps, and charge plates light for space among the other necessities, like billfold.

—Resolve not to look run down at the heels. Keep lifts in top shape, shoes shined. There are those who know who look at a foot and ankle first.

—Don't Be Faddist — Resolve not to follow EVERY fad and to remember that simplicity is the secret of elegance. But allow the frivolity of one splurge, say on a zany fur hat or a pair of boots. For fashion should not be all that deadly serious.

—Resolve to determine your type. Let's face it. Some of us just are not right out of Vogue or Harper's Bazaar, able to put on an extreme and carry it off.

—Resolve to work in some brilliant color in the wardrobe, no matter what the wage or the age bracket. Today's spectrum of color is so wide there are bright hues to become everyone.

—Resolve not to pour it on in the way of accessories. One handsome pin, standing alone, does more for the wearer than a collection of jangling bracelets, plus rhinestone earrings plus glittering necklace.

—Plan Wardrobe Carefully — Resolve never to shop at the last minute. Instead, plan ahead, building a wardrobe long range as one builds a house. A solid foundation of good materials first. One good simple dress over five dresses less costly and less wearable.

—Resolve not to hang a garment in the closet after wearing unless that loosened snap has been re-sewn... that hem that ripped slightly is stitched back.

—Resolve that a girdle can help, but it takes the combination of diet, exercise and patience to whip that waistline back to its onetime, natural 25 inches.

—Resolve to check dress form and aft in a full length, three-way mirror before leaving the house.

—Resolve to keep the white touches of blouses, collars and cuffs, stark white. No cosmetic smudge. No second day grime.

—Resolve to restrain use of eye makeup. One masculine observer we know complains that all the eyeshadow and eye pencil are turning women into a bunch of clowns.

—Resolve to unstack those hairdos. Overly-teased and confused hair combs are outmoded.

—Resolve to dress not only for your self-assurance but for the assurance of the man in your life.
