The Planter’s Daughter

OR FATE’S REVENGE

by MRS. ALICE F. CARBONTON

Author of "A Wolf from the Sea," "Her Brightest Hour," "Ways and Means."

CHAPTER I

And now, nearly four years had passed since the event had occurred which had changed Mrs. Lenora for life. She had been a rich, beautiful young woman, the toast of every ball in the county, an heiress in her own right, and possessed of all the graces that go to make up a woman of distinction. She had been desolate and penniless. Now she was again rich and happy. Her beauty had not diminished, but her beauty had a new and brighter expression. Her eyes were now the deep blue of the midnight sky, and her face was the white of snow. But the expression in her eye was no longer that of love and devotion, but of hate and revenge. She was the woman who had been wronged, and she was determined to make her wrongs right.

Mrs. Lenora had been married to a man who had deserted her in her hour of need. She had been left penniless, and her husband had refused to support her. Mrs. Lenora had then gone to work, and had become the most successful business woman in the county. She had made a fortune, and she had used her fortune to seek revenge on those who had wronged her.

When her husband had heard of her success, he had tried to make amends, but she had refused to accept his advances. She had told him that she would not forgive him until she had seen her revenge. He had then told her that he would do anything to make her happy, and he had given her the fortune that had been stolen from her.

Mrs. Lenora had then turned to her revenge, and she had used her fortune to seek revenge on those who had wronged her. She had become the most successful business woman in the county, and she had used her fortune to seek revenge on those who had wronged her.

CHAPTER II

And now, nearly four years had passed since the event had occurred which had changed Mrs. Lenora for life. She had been a rich, beautiful young woman, the toast of every ball in the county, an heiress in her own right, and possessed of all the graces that go to make up a woman of distinction. She had been desolate and penniless. Now she was again rich and happy. Her beauty had not diminished, but her beauty had a new and brighter expression. Her eyes were now the deep blue of the midnight sky, and her face was the white of snow. But the expression in her eye was no longer that of love and devotion, but of hate and revenge. She was the woman who had been wronged, and she was determined to make her wrongs right.

Mrs. Lenora had been married to a man who had deserted her in her hour of need. She had been left penniless, and her husband had refused to support her. Mrs. Lenora had then gone to work, and had become the most successful business woman in the county.

When her husband had heard of her success, he had tried to make amends, but she had refused to accept his advances. She had told him that she would not forgive him until she had seen her revenge. He had then told her that he would do anything to make her happy, and he had given her the fortune that had been stolen from her.

Mrs. Lenora had then turned to her revenge, and she had used her fortune to seek revenge on those who had wronged her. She had become the most successful business woman in the county, and she had used her fortune to seek revenge on those who had wronged her.