Lake Side Stock Farm a Winner.

carped from the start by lack of experience and money. But as I said in the outset of this story, a rich man is not the only person who can make a success of breeding fine cattle; a poor man can make a success, to, especially if he confines his breeding to that of dairy cattle."

Since Mr. Frakes made his first bow in the show ring he has visited all of the Oregon State Fair as the Washington State Fair at North Yakima, carrying off first prizes every time.

The average value of his 105 thoroughbred Holstein cattle is $90, or nearly $10,000 for the lot. About ten years ago, when he owned 112 head of graded and registered cattle, principally the the former, their average value was about $50. So it will be seen that there has been a decided increase in value and in quality during the decade. He gradually disposed of his scrub cattle and three years ago got rid of the last animal of this class. He aims to keep not less than 50 registered cows on his farm for dairy purposes, and last year he sold 500 gallons of cream in Portland.

HERD TAKES PRIZES.

Associated with P. A. Frakes in the conduct of the dairy breeding farm is G. E. Frakes, son of the founder, and the two give their undivided attention and best efforts to the prize-winning herd that has attracted much attention at the Lewis and Clark livestock show the past fortnight.

Included in the illustrations on this page are four of the best specimens of the Holstein breed to be found on the Pacific Coast. Sir Mechthilde Jewel (32,732) celebrated his third birthday at the Exposition show, being entered in 2-year-old class of animals under 3. This is a handsome well-proportioned white bull, weight 2000 pounds, and took first prize in his class and the reserve champion prize. Lunde Oregon De kol (25,563), 6 years old, a beautiful marked animal, took the first prize, champion and grand championship awards, the latter calling for a gold medal, in the aged class of bulls. This animal weighs 2600 pounds and was second in weight of all the bulls, exhibited of every breed. He is kept in good breeding flesh and if in fat stock condition would easily tip the beam at 3300 and possibly more.

Among the cows Virgo Beauty 4th's De Kol (65,876), to be three years old November 21, took 4th prize as a 2-year-old. This animal is really a very fine cow, but of rather small size. She was given first place in the livestock show of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

Chloe Mechthilde, 49,537, 7 years old, was first in the aged class, also receiving champion and grand-championship award. This beautifully marked cow weighs 1300 pounds and has the official A. R. O. record of 512 pounds of milk in seven days and 22 1/2 pounds of churned butter. These bulls and cows shown in accompanying illustrations are fair examples of the others seen in the herd.

"Oregon dairymen are beginning to appreciate the value of this breed. It is peculiarly adapted to this climate and to our conditions," said Mr. Frakes.

VALUE OF THE BREED.

"If a general-purpose breed is one that is equally valuable for each and every leading purpose for which cattle are used, it is not such a breed. This breed excels in milk production, it is superior for veal production and valuable for beef production. If this combination of qualities defines a general-purpose breed it is such a breed. For generations the natural conditions under which these cattle have been developed have been most favorable for this combination of qualities. Looking upon one of its model cows, the broad loin and rump seems just the place for the growth of the finest quality of beef and a fit support of a capacious udder. The straight quarters and well rounded body cannot detract from milk production. Her calves are large at birth and they grow and fatten with great rapidity. In Holland and Belgium this combination of qualities and uses is universal.

"Quantity of production and persistency of milking during long periods are well known characteristics of this breed. Dropping her first calf at about two years old, an average cow of this breed, if well fed and cared for, will produce from 5000 to 6000 pounds of milk in ten months, and she will increase this production each and every year, until at 5 years old she will give from 7000 to 9000 pounds. The quality of this milk will range from 3 to 4 per cent fat and from 9 to 10 per cent solids not fat. If fed to the extent of their ability to digest and assimilate food the majority of these cows will exceed this production. Before the introduction of this breed, from 3500 to 4000 pounds per annum were registered as extreme high averages for cows in this country. We think it safe to affirm that the introduction of this breed has raised, directly or indirectly, the average production of American cows from 1500 to 2000 pounds.
