W. H. Haynes of Salem, brother-in-law of J. W. Morton, spent a few days in Hood River in September looking for a location for farming. Mr. Haynes has been a resident of Hood River before, and since an absence of about five years, found our town has doubled in size and population.

The Los Angeles Express says: "The horticultural development of San Bernardino county is truly marvellous. It is all attributable to irrigation enterprises, and as yet the limits of improvement are not in sight. What has already been accomplished will certainly be far surpassed in the future."

It is rumored that the company in Portland that has been locating settlers in the White Salmon country is liable to be in hot water on account of alleged violation of the law. A couple of special agents were over in that neighborhood during the week and took a witness or two with them to Portland.

A letter from Rev. Deos Howells, states that Condon had quite a serious fire Sunday night last. Glasgow's, Bivens' stable, Binchart's residence, Dunlap's blacksmith shop and Ward's hotel were burned. Major Lucas moved his household goods, which caught fire and burned while the house escaped. Mr. Howells expects to be here by the 20th at the latest.

Geo. W. Hamilton called at this office Thursday to have us correct a statement published a year ago to the effect that his wife had left him. The story was entirely without foundation, as Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton are now and have been ever since their marriage living together, and are now at Vancouver Washington. As he lived here several years, he desired this statement made.

A party consisting of A. B. Jones, Bruce Della, and the three Curran brothers were across the Columbia last week bear hunting. The first day Flint Bradford was with them with his two dogs and tried a big bear which one of the Curran boys shot but it got away. The next day they got Stump and his pack of hounds, and this time bear. They brought home a big fellow Tuesday. We came near forgetting to add that Lou Morse was one of the crowd.

Peter Mohr took the first premium at the Dalles Fair for the best general exhibit of apples grown in the district, and also for the best exhibit grown in Wasco county. He also took about twenty first, and seven or eight second premiums on varieties. Mr. T. L. Clarke also took a dozen or more first premiums on varieties. Outside of these two, we believe Hood River took no interest in the fair other than to visit it, and not a great quantity of that.

Last Sunday a party of six consisting of Mrs. A. B. Jones, Miss Grace Groshong, Miss Eva Blowers, Frank Jones, J. W. Morton and Miss Pearl Groshong, visited the famous old "Indian Gardens" or E. R. Absten's place. They concluded that Mr. Absten has one of the nicest little farms in Hood River, from the fact that he has all kinds of fruit, and this year has manufactured 500 gallons of black berry wine which was sampled and pronounced excellent.

Have you seen the $15.00 antique needle bed room set at the furniture store?

On the East Side.

Last Sunday we took a ride through a portion of the east side of the valley, Corum's place being the objective point and were more than pleased with what we saw. Such places as Lage's, Turner's, and others, give abundant proof of the readiness of our soil to respond to the labors of the husbandman, and to reward his toil with abundant harvests. We found Mr. Corum at home, and hitching our team made a trip through his orchard. Of course everything but the apples and pears were gone, but the trees were loaded with these to the breaking point, and as they have been irrigated for years, refute the fallacy that "irrigation kills the trees". The orchard shows signs of neglect, but the trees could not yield any more, abundantly without destroying them, which shows that water will take the place of more faithful and careful cultivation. It is seeded to clover, the second crop being about ready to cut, the red bloom reaching almost waist high. It is a splendid place, made so by the presence of a fine stream of water, four hundred inches belonging to the place. Every ten acres of this place would support a family, and leave a handsome yearly surplus. In the Spring the woods are filled with wild strawberries, and their cultivated brothers yield enormously. The time is not far distant when such farms as Mr. Corum's will be cut up into ten or twenty acre tracts, and when this is done, and both cultivation and water are applied judiciously, Hood river valley will bloom and flourish like the rose. After sampling the fruit and selecting some beautiful specimens of wax-bite apples of (to us) unknown variety, we continued our trip, coming past Harrison Bros' and thence home. On every side were evidences of improvement. Young orchards, new buildings, clearings and fences indicate that the hardy settler is heaving out a home and laying the foundation for future prosperity. The orchards, irrigated or not, were all laden with fruit that would make even old Oregonians open their eyes. The day was perfect, the roads with the exception of the small bridges, which needed new planks sadly, were first class, and the indications of energy and thrift everywhere visible, enough to warm the heart of the veriest pessimist. The east side has always shown more or less jealousy of this side of the river, but with their heavier soils and self-evident superiority to the balance of the world, it can well afford to put aside any such feeling: A ride through the valley will convince the most sceptical that Hood River is the great fruit-growing section of Oregon. It is in its infancy now, but as it grows up it will out-top all competitors.

Photography.

If there is one art more than another requires skill and in which bungling work is an never-ending source of annoyance, it is that of the photographer. His work is always up for inspection, and if poorly done is a source of chagrin. The traveling photographer with his tent has made more honest people blush for very shame of themselves than all other arts and trades besides. The moral to all this is that if you want good work done, go to a first-class photographer, one who has a permanent business and reputation at stake. The photographers art can not make us all beautiful, but it can give us an accurate counterpart of ourselves and this is all that is required. Besides pictures are given to friends or dear ones yet, and the donor wishes to look as well at least as kind old dame Nature intended. This being true we take pleasure in recommending to all our readers who visit Portland B. C. Towne the photographer, corner of First and Morrison streets. You will get first-class work, and you will get it at the very lowest rates. We speak from experience, and know his work to be the equal of the best anywhere.

A Burglar.

Thursday evening about ten o'clock, Thomas Ryan was arrested by Constable Olinger as he was coming out of Delk's saloon. Olinger and James Hoag had just come in from Mr. Potter's place, and Hoag went from the barn to the hotel, on his way over he heard the noise of breaking glass in the rear of Delk's saloon, and listening soon heard footsteps inside. He at once notified Olinger, and they repaired to the scene of action in time to see Ryan crawl out of the back window, and to arrest him. He had broken a fourteen by sixteen inch pane of glass, and when caught had about a quart of whiskey in a tin bucket, placed within reach inside of the window. He was examined before Justice Welds, Friday morning, bound over to await the action of the grand jury, and was taken to The Dalles on the morning train. His excuse was that he wanted a drink, and there being no body to wait on him, he thought he would help himself.

Alliance Meeting.

The County Alliance will meet in the hall of Excelsior Alliance two miles west of Hood River at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. October 13. All delegates in attendance will be entertained by the Alliance of Hood River. The delegates have chartered the Regulator for the trip.

W. J. CAMPBELL,
Secretary County Alliance.

Spring Dresses of Ladies' Cloth.

This beautiful material in light weight qualities is worn for street, visiting, home, dinner, evening and bridesmaids' costumes, with a garniture of jewel passementerie, embroidery, ostrich feather bands or velvet. Such is the present fancy, and it ceases to become queer when we see the lovely gowns.

One for home wear is a princess of black lapped in front diagonally from the neck to the feet over the left side, of old rose, with the opening, neck and wrists bordered with a black silk moss trimming, dotted here and there with loops of old rose chenille.

Two cloths for street costumes are combined with the lighter shade for the vest, deep cuffs and under skirt, which shows on the left where the upper drape is slightly lifted. The straight back, front, pointed bodice and full top portion of the sleeves are of a darker color, tan and white or brown, gray and white or pale blue. The light portion is often braided with gold, silver or steel.

Lovely bridesmaids' dresses are of pink or yellow cloth, with chiffon sleeves and yokes, an old but stylish mixture, and a further trimming of ostrich bands or tinsel passementerie. Evening dresses of this universally becoming material are most suitably trimmed with feathers. Some remarkably stylish dinner gowns of it are made in princess style, with a half low neck and long sleeves, and are trimmed with the jewel passementerie that lights up so beautifully.

Street costumes of gray or tan are very French when made in the simplest manner, with an almost plain skirt, full sleeves, pointed bodice or one of the new basques and trimmed with darker velvet edged with tinsel or silk and tinsel passementerie.

There are medium blue, lead and golden brown shades for those wishing something darker, but the light shades are the stylish ones. Tea gowns of cloth have fronts of chiffon or crepe over surah and a trimming of ostrich bands. The success of this fabric is not to be doubted, as it is already assured and is proving one of the reigning "fads."—Emma Hooper in Dry Goods Economist.

Comedone Faces.

The chemist, who has studied medicine further than many doctors, had something to say the other day about comedone faces. It seems he has more inquiries for remedies for this disfigurement than any other, and they are mainly from women who have swallowed quarts of medicine in hopes to cure it.

"Tell them," he said, his mind running on the subject, "to quit taking such loads of blood purifiers. The blood may not be out of order, but only needing a chance to work off its daily impurities the natural way, and blood purifiers make the matter worse. Their diet ought to be right, and tend to free elimination, plenty of not drinks to cause perspiration, coarse bread, soups rich with vegetable juices, but no pie crust, cake or pudding, nor sauces with starch or flour in them till the state of things which causes a rough face is broken up. It won't be easily done."

"Doctors say few disorders are so slow to cure as this sluggish state of the skin, mainly because people cannot be persuaded to give proper pains and attention to themselves. They won't bathe, or if they do the water isn't hot and alkaline, and the rubbing afterward is not enough to stir up the whole system as it ought to be of the least use."

"Do you notice that excitable people never have pimply faces or blackheads in the skin? It is your dull, depressed, sluggish natures who suffer with them. A quick set of nerves is good as an electric battery to keep the body in working order, if only it isn't overcharged and torn to wreck. This is why people with spinal diseases seldom suffer with other ailments, for the acute nerves throw everything off. What force there is in the system is at the fingers ends and on the surface of the skin, not congested or half dead at the roots."—Shirley Dare's Letter.

For Traveling Women.

Of special interest to lady travelers in England is the establishment of the lady guides in Coelistrast. This venture is only about a year old, and the enterprising ladies who started it were roundly laughed at by their friends, who thought the project a visionary one. But the success of the plan has been abundantly proven. The ladies in charge undertake to do everything that a stranger in London would wish to have done. They recommend hotels and lodging houses, and will engage rooms for you in advance, if you so desire. You have only to name the location, price and general features of a stopping place, and they can be relied on to procure it for you.

They shop for you, engage servants, meet friends at the station, take care of the children while you go pleasureing, or entertain them at Mrs. Tassard's or any other place of amusement that you may elect; show you about picture galleries, get tickets of admission to all the difficult places, and, in general, supply you with what you lack to make your visit comfortable, with the exception of a contented mind, the traveler's most necessary commodity. At the headquarters of the Lady Guides there are reception rooms supplied with newspapers and writing materials, dressing rooms, private rooms in which to interview servants, and a modest restaurant. As a correspondent says: "The overworked, the shiftless, the lazy, the stranger, all go to the Lady Guides."—Helen Marshall North in New York Ledger.

An Ambitious Japanese Woman.

Among the special students at Bryn Mawr college is Miss Urne Tauda, a Japanese woman, who is the teacher of English in the Peeresess' school at Tokio. Miss Tauda was one of the five little girls sent in 1871 by the Japanese government to be educated in this country, she and one companion remaining here for ten years. She is much interested in raising a fund to establish scholarships in the United States for Japanese girls, who will fit themselves here and return to Japan as teachers in girls' schools to be established there.—Harper's Bazar.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays of each week between September 16 and October 17, the Union Pacific will sell excursion tickets to Portland and return at one and one-fifth fare for the round trip.
