The Secret of Fine Pastry.

Is wholly in using Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. The only pure Cream Tarter Powder sold on the market. Other brands contain either ammonia, alum or some other adulterant. Ammonia or alum powders dry out, make the dough too porous, leaving a bitter taste, etc.

No agency has assisted so much toward perfection in cookery as Price's Cream Baking Powder. Its ingredients are simple and so blended as to exist in exact chemical proportions, so after use there is never any excess of either left in the food. Hence there can be no impurities whatever left in the finished food. No bitter taste, no taint of ammonia, but very well known. When the party food raised with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder partakes of the natural sweet flavor of the flour and keeps moist and fresh for days. This powder possesses qualities peculiar to it alone. No other makes such delicious pastry. No other contains the white of eggs.

CREOLE HOME LIFE.

Their Horror of Publicity-An Illustration of Prejudice-A New Era. The creole woman's work was always done at home. The old creoles, who "never forgive a public mention," shrank with horror from publicity for their women. The example of free and easy going young L'Americaine was held up as one to be shunned. Gradually, almost imperceptibly, the new current sweeping through woman's kingdom found entrance through the barriers thrown up by creole pride and prejudice. So wide has this current now grown and so resistless that to-day creole women are found in every avenue of public employment. Five years ago the creok girl who stood behind a counter was a heroine, braving family and social scorn, but making the step

Perhaps no more striking illustration of the prejudice of the creole could be given than the following authentic one of an old gentleman of New Orleans, dead only a few years. Of gentle blood and college bred, he clung to his faubourg with fierce tenacity. The French quarter was good; why should he live elsewhere? and his scorn of the new town being built by the impertinent, intrusive, all conquering American was intense. At that time-somewhere in the thirties-the creoles did not attempt to conceal their dislike for the Americans, who were changing the business methods and upsetting the traditions of the city. Nor were the Americans slow to express their contempt for the crooles. This choleric creole, as he sat with his boon companion in Cafe des Exils, and read in L'Abeille of the daily revolutionary acts of the new comers, was deeply angered. Though impotent to prevent, he could at least show his disapproval of the upstarts. He vowed he would never cross Canal street

(the thoroughfare separating the old town from the new), and he never did, but by lines of azure ditches and canals; be-with rich color, or a narrow, lonely road, bordered by slender silver lines of water, winding through the green meadows; at a near turn stands a windmill, its thatch, toned by sun and rain to a warm brown ochre, broken by cold, greenish lines of woodwork, and stretching into the vast sky its giant arms, perhaps carrying sails of ivory or russet canvas, a part of the wide horizon, blurred by the movement of waving gray willows masking a lonely house. The interiors of the villages are simply symphonies in color. The ancient bricks of the houses are a real red, or pale yellow; the woodwork—door frames,

Have prescribed it a great many times, and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not core, if they would take it seconding to directions. "German Syrup"

Here is an incident from the South Mississippi, written in April, 1890, just after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe came along and I caught that also very severely. My condition then compelled me to do something. I got two bottles of German Syrup. I began using them, and before taking much of the second bottle, I was never crossed the line. No rancor entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since." PETER J. BRIALS, Jr., Cayuga, Hines Co., Miss.

It is broken up into tiny drops which are covered with glycerine, just as quinine in pills is coated with sugar or gelatine. You do not get the taste at all.

The hypophosphites of lime and soda add their tonic effect to that of the half-digested cod-liver oil.

A Baby Who Survived the Perils of Central Africa to Die at Last in London-A tablet to the memory of Little Jack, the boy missionary, as he was called, erected by Sunday school children, was unveiled over his grave in London. Little Jack was only 7 years old when he died. Though he was born in England, pearly all his brief life was spent in Central Africa. He was famous as the only white baby ever seen in the region of the great lakes; and after passing unscathed through all the dangers of Equatorial Africa, he fell a victim at last to measles in his native land.

JACK, THE BOY MISSIONARY.

Jack was the son of the well known us the best map of Lake Tanganyika us the best map of Lake Tanganyika that has yet been made. He started for Africa with his parents when he was only 11 weeks old, and the story of the baby's trip to Lake Tanganyika, which was written by his mother, made Jack only 11 weeks old, and the story of the was written by his mother, made Jack started inland from Zanzibar they trundled Jack in a wheelbarrow. The softest possible bed was made for him in a wicker basket, whose sides were padded so that he could not hurt himself. The basket was placed in a steel wheelbar row frame, and in this conveyance Jack made a very comfortable journey to thinker wonders how it was possible for that monstrosity—the medical science (?) extant now—to have survived to this late were reasons, however, why it was not day! But where was the reform to come thought best for Jack and his mother to from? It is not only passe to attempt rego any further that year, and so the form, it is outright dangerous. It requires go any further that year, and so the

The year following Jack and his mother started for Africa once more, and his father rigged up another sort of conveyance for the baby passenger. This time bamboo poles were fastened to the sides of the basket and four porters were ers. All this is caused by besotted ignorsides of the basket and four porters were detailed to carry Jack. As they swung along the path the supple poles gave to the basket a springy motion which was very pleasing to the little fellow. Along the bamboos was stretched a canvas awning, impervious alike to sun or rain, with movable sides, that could be fastened up or down at pleasure. His mother was carried in a bath chair rigged up in a similar fashion.

After Jack had been carried far inland African fever tackled the little fellow, and then he insisted much of the time upon being carried in his mother's lap, but happily he did not suffer long from the formidable foe of white men in Afri-When the caravan halted for the noonday lunch, the first duty of the men was to pitch a tent to shelter Jack and his mother from the scorching sun.

One day a porter ran away with a canvas bag containing nearly all of Jack's wardrobe. The calamity, however, was easily remedied, for Mr. Hore had a lot of cotton cloth to pay his way through the country, and Jack soon had a new wardrobe. Many of the marches were very wearisome, and Mrs. Hore wrote that she and Jack often presented a very draggled appearance when the halt was made for the day.

The journey lasted ninety days. At last Jack and his parents embarked on the beantiful waters of Lake Tanganyika, and negro boatmen, singing at their paddles, took them to the Island of Kavala, which was Jack's home during all his babyhood in Central Africa. Friends in England sent him many playguha playmates, and he never knew that Equatorial Africa was not the pleasantest place in the world for a white boy to grow up in .- New York Sun.

Does It Hurt Him?

Does a dismembered limb retain sensitiveness? Many persons hold firmly that it does. Their belief is apparently sustained by those strange and vivid imaginings of persons who have lost a hand or foot, and declare positively that they have feelings in the fingers or toes of the lost member. The phenomenon, however, has been explained in a scientific way. Such cases are frequent, and Edgar Bergen, a 12-year-old boy who lives at 240 West Michigan street, is an example. He was taking a ride on the cars in the Big Four yards, when he slipped. He was dragged some distance, but could not maintain a safe position, and his left foot was cut off above the ankle, remaining in the shoe. The boy was taken home, and his leg was amputated just below the knee. The foot was taken to Crown Hill and buried in a lot near his mother's grave. The little fellow bore his pains bravely and never lost consciousness, but he complains frequently that the toes of his dismembered foot are cramped, and the foot seems still to be in position. The foot was placed in a cramped position in the box in which it was buried, and a member of the household declares that this accounts for the boy's sensations, and recalls cases which she thinks confirm this view.-Indianap-

The Novel of the Future.

Edmund Gosse, the English critic. gives his reasons in The Forum for believing that the novel of the future will not be "realistic." He gives the school of Zola credit for having killed forever the excesses of the old fashioned story, but the realists, he contends, have reached the limit of their development. On one side they have become gross, as the French and Russian novelists, and on the other side they have become insipid. The novel of the future will pay more heed to "the human instinct for mystery and beauty." Mr. Gosse writes an analysis of Zolaism, making an estimate of Zola, whom he calls the Vulcan among our later gods; and he has a pleasant word for our American realists, Mr. James and Mr. Howells.

Bismarck's Autograph on a Door. The Museum of Antiquities at Gottingen has made a remarkable addition to its treasures. It consists in nothing less than the battered door of the university prison, on which is cut in bold characters the name of "Bismarck." It seems that the ex-chancellor, in his law student days, suffered a brief period of detention there for some trifling breach of disci-pline, and amused himself by carving his patronymic with unmistakable clear-ness on the door of the cell.—London
