

Hood River Glacier.

HOOD RIVER, OR., JULY 2, 1892.
A DESIRE FOR CHANGE.

The careful observer of the political movements will note the feeling of independence, of restlessness and of dissatisfaction with their party, by a large element of both democrats and republicans. It is not a changing of politics as regards the old parties, but a desire for something new. This same observer will find by examining into the causes for this unrest and desire for change a revival of a portion at least of the old Know Nothing doctrines. There is undoubtedly a strong and rapidly growing sentiment in favor of an American party. This element believes the doors of Castle Garden should be closed, and that immigration should be stopped. The time has come when this should cease to be the "asylum for all the nations of the earth." The asylum sentiment has outlived its usefulness, and it is argued very properly that those seeking this asylum should not be entitled to nor expect to conduct its affairs. The "protection to American labor" theories have set this element of independents to reasoning that if this is the correct theory it should be carried to its legitimate conclusions, and that the first step should be not to shut out the products of foreign labor, but to shut out the foreign labor itself. This, they say, would protect the American laborer generally to a much greater degree than all the tariff bills that might be enacted. Besides, there is an ever growing sentiment that our naturalization laws are too liberal, and that at least ten years' residence in this country should precede the right to vote, to locate government lands or to own real estate, and that none of these acts could be performed except after being admitted to citizenship. There is room for an American party, and there are people enough to fill it.

LOTAN ON TOP.

The Oregonian expresses its opinion of Lotan's appointment very forcibly, as follows: "In the matter of the appointment of Lotan to the collectorship, there has been a species of indirection and deception that is reprehensible, and even despicable. It was known here three weeks before the general election that he was an applicant for the office. There were many protests against the appointment, and the delegation at Washington held it off, with a design of misleading the public into a belief that it would not be made. Then it was put off again till after the city election, with the same intent. Finally the nomination was smuggled into the senate, no announcement of it was permitted, lest protest might defeat it, and the first thing heard here was that Lotan was nominated and confirmed. This is a piece with the snap judgments and general methods of ring politics that have made all the trouble here. People don't like it; they feel that they have been deceived or trifled with, and they will bide their time to show their displeasure. It may just as well be set down for a certainty, here and now, that the republican party of Oregon can't be carried farther on the old ring basis. This last proceeding is going to change not a few votes from Benjamin Harrison to Grover Cleveland. The resentment is not confined to Portland by any means. It will be felt all over the state."

The Oregonian is waging war on the Australian ballot system. It strikes us that the law is a good one, and that the objection that some people couldn't understand the ballot is of no weight. A citizen that couldn't make out the ticket he wants from the printed ballot as it now is does not deserve to vote. In fact the idea of the system is to compel the voter to fix his own ticket and to prevent ward strikers from doing it for him. If the Oregonian's loud and persistent demands for a fair election in the south mean anything other than political clap-trap, to be consistent it should be a firm friend of the Australian system.

The murderer of little Mamie Walsh has not yet been discovered. From the fact that the girl was killed after being outraged it seems probable that whoever committed the deed was known by the girl and the murder was committed to prevent his identification. The next legislature should remember Baba's advice to Don Juan, when that young gentleman contemptuously kicked the feminine garments away, and pass a bill providing a penalty for the crime of rape that would prevent a second offense.

The citizens of Portland have scarcely begun to congratulate themselves on having downed their political bosses and sent them to the rear, when the news reaches them that Jimi Lotan has been picked out by the Oregon republican delegation for the office of collector of customs at Portland, and has been appointed by the president. The result will be heard in November.

The people's party are somewhat at a loss for a presidential candidate, but our own good governor seems to have been overlooked. The party couldn't go much further for a candidate, but it might fare much worse.

We fully believe that time will show that Joe Simon's fine Italian hand assisted in nominating and electing Portland's present mayor and police and fire commissioners. Sam Parrish's head will go into the basket just for a show, and then the show will end. When a Jew boss is succeeded by a Hebrew, it is a safe bet that the living tribes of Israel are going to remain in business at the old stand.

Before the consolidation of Portland and its adjacent towns it was quite possible to get a letter delivered in Albina or East Portland within a reasonable time. Since the new arrangement it takes a letter two days to reach either place from here and three to get back. If Portland will add another suburb the whole business will be shut off, unless people go to the west side for their mails.

The general sentiment seems to be that whether it be Cleveland or Harrison, we are to have a good president, but Dana of the New York Sun, who four years ago bitterly opposed Cleveland, now says: "Better vote for the devil than respectable Ben Harrison with a force bill in his pocket."

The prohibition party is holding its national convention at Cincinnati. The shade of the late John P. St. John was made temporary chairman.

Mr. Hugh Gourlay has resigned the editorship of The Dalles Chronicle, Mr. Ireland taking his place.

Oregon's First Nursery.

E. W. Allen, in an address before the State Horticultural Society's meeting at Grant's Pass, gave the following account of the introduction of the apple into Oregon:

Among the heroic souls that came to Oregon in 1847 was Henderson Luelling, who was then a resident of Southwestern Iowa, and who conceived the idea of transporting to Oregon a nursery on wheels. This idea he proceeded to put into execution by making two boxes twelve inches deep and just wide and long enough to fill the wagon bed; these he filled with a composite of earth and charcoal, in which he planted several hundred trees and shrubs; these were protected from the stock by a light frame work fastened to the wagon bed. That load was doubtless, for many reasons, the most difficult one to handle that ever crossed the plains, and yet it has been truly said, "That load of trees contained health, wealth and comfort for the old pioneers of Oregon," and it is doubtless true that that load of trees and shrubs brought more wealth to the state than any ship that ever entered the Columbia river. It was the mother of all our nurseries, and gave to Oregon a name and fame she would never have had without it. These trees were planted at Milwaukee, six miles south of Portland, and the sale of fruit and grafts from them brought wealth to the enterprising proprietor. The great immigration to California, caused by the discovery of gold, created a market for every variety, and the "Big Red Apples" from Oregon were sold at enormous prices to miners and others. Many orchards were set out by the pioneer emigrants, and some of the trees planted at that early period are still in vigorous bearing. Fruit culture, especially the apple, proved very profitable, the limited products of those times selling at fancy prices.

Several persons made small fortunes from fruit raising, but few adopted it as an exclusive pursuit. The high prices then obtained gave a great impetus to the planting of orchards, but when these came into full bearing, the increase of supply brought prices down, and California being the only market available, the supply very soon exceeded the demand, the result of which was that a general feeling of carelessness permeated the fruit growers of Oregon, and but little attention was paid to taking proper care of the orchard, or the enormous crops that they produced. The fruit yield in the Willamette valley alone has been estimated to average one million three hundred thousand bushels per annum since the completion of the three trans-continental lines of railroads that now traverse her fertile valleys, bringing as it were the great fruit markets of the east to our very door. A new impetus has been given to fruit growing, and the near future bids fair to see Oregon stand again at the head of the list as the greatest fruit producing state in the Union.

Does S. B. get there? Well I should smile. S. B.
