THE RUNAWAY NEGRO

HIDING OUT ATTAINED WITH HIM THE RANK OF A PROFESSION.

A Figure of the Old South-He Was a Born Woodcraftsman and Cave Dweller, and He Climbed the Trees Monkey Fashion-How He Managed to Live.

Among the many picturesque figures with which the old south teemed a most striking one was the runaway negro. Not the occasional "bider out"-the one who sought temporary refuge in the woods to escape punishment for something done or left undone, or for fear of being sold to the speculators, nor even when the crop was who clung to a wild life as instinctively as an Indian, and who might almost be termed the professional runaway.

Your genuine runaway was a born woodcraftsman. The babits of wild animals and ways of taking them seemed to be his by intuition. He had no difficulty in varying his menu of pig, lamb and poultry with all the rabbits, squirrels, opossums and fish that he wanted. Sometimes he carried his dog into the woods with him, although of course it greatly increased his danger of being taken. But this was more for companionship than anything else, for, single handed, with his snares, traps and "gums," he was more than a match for wild game of all kinds.

Discomforts which would have driven the amateur back to the snug chimney corner of the plantation quarters and a whipping had no terrors for him. Like the rest of his race, he cared not a flg for wet, while cold, the negro's dread, he knew well how to guard against. The art of producing the maximum of fire with the minimum of smoke was his to perfection. He knew exactly what kind of wood and bark to select, and how to combine them to this end. No matter how hard the rain, how sodden the wood, all that he asked was a "chunk," or, lacking that, a coal of fire, to be as happy as a king-the ideal, not the real king, I mean. From a coal which, in unskilled hamis, would scarcely have sufficed to light a pipe, he could, with even the wettest and most impossible kind of fuel, soon call into being the rarest of roaring fires, while in the preservation and transportation of fire he

In the most essential feature of cave architecture-secrecy-he easily surpassed all imitators. Between two suns, and oftener than not with only the wormout stump of a hoe, the runaway would dig and conceal a cave which defied detection from the eyes of a lyux. At the same time several cubic yards of upturned earth had to be whisked away and hid under distant leaves, or, better still, consigned to the safe keeping of some running stream.

For several reasons the wornout "old fields" of the southern states were the favorite site of the cavedinger. These dreary wastes, given over to gulleys, broom sedge and scrub pines, being deserted by manhood in general, were of course his safest retreat. The soil having been over exhausted and "turned out," and the sappy, twisted pines being held worthless for either rails or fuel, there was no danger of the woodman's ax coming that way again for many a long year. Nor did the squirrel or fox hunter have often to seek or follow his quarry into this terra incognito-where indeed the dense screen of the low, thick pines would have confined their vision to a very limited space.

Here this Esau of the south, whom indeed every man's hand was against, and whose hand was against every man, found an ideal dominion, every feature of the surroundings adding to his sustenance or safety. The weirdness and virtual barrenness drove off other men. The deep, water worn gulleys, barriers to the ordinary traveler, whether mounted or on foot, offered him a highway whose firm or gravelly bottom registered no passing footprints to be read by curious or hostile eyes.

Nowhere did he display more ingenuity than in contriving means to approach and depart from his burrow and leave no sign. As I have said, the gully was his favorite path, though occasionally he had recourse to the Indian's highway-astream. Sometimes he would sever at the ground a long, stout grapevine, the other end being se curely interlaced among the tree limbs many feet above. By grasping this vine he was able to swing clear of the ground many feet, or even cross a considerable ravine and drop just at the mouth of his cave. Again, when the pines were thick, he might climb a tree, and passing from limb to limb, monkey fashion, slide down a tree trunk at the proper spot. Still another, which could sometimes be practiced, was to mount a stray ox, and forcing him to the proper place spring off. One very original old darky, little dreaming that history was repeating itself-with a variation-is said to have fashioned to his shoes an old pair of horseshoes, reversed, knowing that no runaway hunter would ever think to notice a horse track.

Amid the swamps the malaria proof negro found little difficulty, if so minded, in passing a lifetime "hid out," But up among the hills of the central portion. where there were no retreats impenetrable to all but the initiated, where the farmhouses were close together and comparatively little land uncleared, it took no little skill and cunning to play the runaway successfully for any considerable period. cessful ones. A few children were born in the woods. I knew of one instance in which the close of the war brought up a considerable family of whose existence the legal owner knew nothing.-David Lodge in Kate Field's Washington.

The drawing took place n a theater called "the Academy of Music." at eleven o'clock in the morngrassy and the work hard, but the one ing. The yellow gas-jets battled feetly with the daylight in the lobby into which the people were pressing without et or qualification. The theater was two-thirds full at last. On the stage, set with a parler (cene, was a knot of men between two wheels. The wheel on the right was a band of silver, with sides of glass and with a door in the metal rim. A bushel of little black gutta-percha envelopes the size of dominoes had been Chronic Headache Cured-Weak poured into this wheel, and a white boy, blindfolded with a handkerchief, stood at the handle of the crank by which the wheel was turned. He had one arm in the door of the wheel, and with the hand of the other arm was offering a tiny envelope to Gen. Beauregard-the last surviving general who served on either side in our late war. A fine, most gentlemanly-looking man he is, with the features of a French courtier, with snowy hair, a white mustsche, a little goatee, and the pinkest skin a baby ever knew. He was an tiessly dressed. Across the stage, beside a very much larger wheel, of particulored boards, sat Major-General Jubal A. Early-a perfect type of the conventional figure of Father Time; tall, portly, stoop-shouldered, partly bald and with a long, heavy, white beard. He was dressed all in the color of the uniform he distinguished by his valor as

By each general stood a blindfolded boy, taking numbers out of the wheels, and handing them to the generals, From the big wheel to Major-General Early came the numbers of the tickets; rom the little wheel to General Beauregard came the numbers of dollars that formed the prize each ticket had won. By each general stood a crier. Early read out, "Twenty-one thousand one hundred and fifty-two;" and Beauregare, naving shelled the gurta percha case : It a billet, read out, "Two hundred dollars." Then the criers took the billets and cried the numbe s.
