The White Salmon camp meeting has moved, saint and sinner, preacher and proselyte, bag and baggage, to Trout Lake, where the flinty hearts of the unregenerate will be assailed with paint and prayer until snow flies.

There has never yet been a season when the roads to Cloud Cap were as good and the ride as pleasant as this one, and yet the travel is much lighter than usual. The world's fair, financial disturbances and cool weather are the causes.

Hood River could manage to keep all the young ladies who are attending the Institute, here, this would soon become the most popular summer resort on the coast. Forty school matrons, each more beautiful than the others, are not to be seen every day.

The Methodists have decided to postpone building their church for a while. Nothing more than the foundation will be built this fall. In the meantime they have the lumber on the ground for the erection of a temporary building, which they will use for the present.

The closing of the Commercial National bank of Portland caused considerable commotion here, as the Oregon Lumber Company's checks for the month had just been issued, and most of them were in the hands of our merchants. The checks were drawn on the Commercial.

The Winans brothers are having some legal trouble, we understand with parties formerly interested with them in the fishing business. Their fishing material on the Oregon side of the river has been attached pending a settlement of disputed claims, but the wheels are, under agreement of parties, running just the same.

J. W. Morton came up from Tillamook, Wednesday for a week's visit. He likes his new home and says it is the finest dairy country in the world, but finds some fault with the climate, it being too damp for one accustomed to Eastern Oregon.

Grant Evans, Frank Watson and Will Haynes went to Lost lake Sunday. As the procession filed around Middleton's barn and disappeared up the state road, the clouds which had begun to lose time at sight of them, decked again regularly.

High water still interferes with work at the Cascades, but the contractors are getting an immense amount of stone ready for placing, and when the time comes a big showing will soon be made. It is quite probable boats now on the lower river will pass here before 1893.

The Times-Mountaineer says: In the rattle for the whip that was the principal factor in the sensation in this city Friday afternoon, July 21st, No. 11 won. We are told that the amount realized was $166.59. Some person inclined to sarcasm attached a card to the whip which read: "The first thing that ever beat the Rev. O. D. Taylor."

The telephone crowd arrived here Wednesday and commenced work Thursday morning. They will follow the old Dalles and Sandy wagon road down the river, and as another gang is building east from Troutdale, the line will soon be finished from Spokane to Portland, the gap between here and Troutdale being all there is left to complete.

Fresh candies received every day at Stranahan's.

Teacher's Institute.

The Wasco County Teacher's Institute met here Monday morning under the direction of Superintendent Shelly.

The attendance from the start has been unusually large, 53 being present Thursday. Every teacher seems to be deeply interested in the work, and to feel that the meeting is of great benefit to all. The programme as published is being carried out, there being two classes and five instructors. Institute work will close on the 8th and the regular examination of teachers will begin at noon, Wednesday the 9th.

A Dalles Bank Closes.

The First National bank of The Dalles closed its doors Monday. Soon after the bank opened $10,000 were drawn out, and the cashier anticipating a run closed up. According to the statement made Saturday night the bank has assets of $133,133; liabilities $73,382. The general opinion in The Dalles is that the cashier acted hastily, and that there was no occasion for closing. We understand parties in The Dalles stood ready to back the bank for quite a large sum, and city depositors would not have taken out a dollar.

A Vain Effort.

Indian Jim's daughter aged about 12 years, died Tuesday. Monday evening a lot of squaws gathered near Jim's camp and catching a dog tied it in a tree and beat it to death with clubs, to "exorcise the evil spirit." The unearthly yell of the "exorcised" dog swelled by the chorus joined in by all the other dogs was enough to put the chief of evil spirits to flight, but it had no effect except to exercise the spirit of the beaten canine. From the noise, one could be easily persuaded that Mayor Rinchart had reported The Dalles stood ready to back the bank for quite a large sum, and city depositors would not have taken out a dollar.

It Was Warm Enough.

Sunday was a reasonably warm day here, but Monday left it literally in the shade, the thermometer registering 97. The same day at The Dalles it ranged from 103 to 105, and at Willows 60 miles further east, 114 was reported. Tuesday a cool breeze from the west prevailed, to the satisfaction of everybody except the individual with the inordinate desire to know if it is hot enough for you.

A Ditch Proposition.

Geo. C. and Edward G. Jones have expressed their willingness to construct an irrigating dune and canal, to supply both sides of the valley if the right of way can be secured. They say that they are willing to put money into the ditch, but not into the courts for the purpose of condemning land for the right of way. How many land owners will give the right of way?

TO THE UNATTAINABLE.

Dear, how many the songs I bring to you
Woven of dream stuff, pleasure and pain,
All the songs of my life I sing to you,
And you hear and answer again.

Thought no rhyme do your dear lips say to me,
Yet, my poet, sweet songs you bring;

When you smile then the angels play to me
Tunes to the silent songs you sing.

All my soul goes forth to a song to you,
All my heart for your sake are done,

All my hands and body belong to you,

But your name is my battle song,

Just by thinking you make my life dear to me,

Though your lips never speak my name!

Take your hands that so divine appear to me,
Bringing me all that I lack of fame.

—E. Neelot in Longman's Magazine.

A Terrified Bachelor.

There is a Boston editor of a proper periodical who has a large heart as he has a skillful pen. Not long ago he received some manuscript from a western author in whose work he saw considerable promise. He accepted much of the work and encouraged further efforts. These came, and were likewise found available. Then the editor conceived the idea that his newly found author should come to a literary center, where chances for material and observation would be greater. Accordingly, he invited his new "find" to spend a few weeks at his Boston home. A reply came, heartily accepting the invitation, but one sentence in the letter caused consternation in the editor's mind. During all his correspondence the editor believed he was writing to a man, and had accordingly addressed his letters.

Hence this sentence was a surprise: "It is indeed generous of you to offer such kindness to a young girl removed from opportunity by her residence." The editor is a bachelor, and keeps house in true bachelor fashion. He felt that he could not withdraw his invitation, and he certainly could not take the girl to his home as he had to his heart. But the girl is in Boston, accompanied by a female friend, at the suggestion of the editor, and in her own apartments she is happily located, unconscious of the moment of terror she shot into the heart of her generous editorial friend.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Teapots and Complexion.

Frequeters of the popular afternoon tea are remarking the extraordinary pains pretty girls who pour the amber beverage are at to direct the tapering spout of the kettle in the direction of their rosy cheeks, or white brow and chin.

It appears that some one has assured them that the warm, fragrant steam arising from the steaming leaves is most beneficial for softening and purifying the complexion.

The heated vapor does bring a deep pink flush, and cause dampened locks to curl tendrill-like about the forehead, but these amateur waitresses are laboring under a grievous error when they imagine that this treatment beautifies the skin. It is harmful in the extreme, and unless the saffron is immediately followed by a brisk toweling a chapped and roughened complexion will be the result.

All through the orange-growing country, where that exquisite fruit is eaten from the time its rind shows the faintest gilding, girls always peel the oranges at arm's length, being fully convinced, because some negro minstrels have told them so, that the pungent oil springing from the skin will leave a freckle wherever it touches.—Illustrated American.

Woman Suffrage in Sorosis.

Somebody asked Marion Harland a short time ago if it was true that all members of Sorosis were suffragists. "That subject," said she, "is tabooed in our discussions." It is true that any reference to it is strictly prohibited, and I have heard that some years ago a stranger, unacquainted with the rules of the famous woman's club and blundering upon the forbidden topic, was treated to some of those soft purrings which with women more gently and politely serve the purpose for which men use hisses, and that a special vote of the assembly was required before she could be allowed to proceed.

I do not know that this is true, but if so the rigor of the law must have been relaxed somewhat of late, for at a recent meeting I noted that two speakers briefly, but quite directly, advocated the ballot for women, and the remarks of two others seemed to have a certain leaning in that direction. Curiously enough the most pointed utterances came from the very member who is said to have introduced years ago the resolution barring politics and religion.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

She Has Traveled in Yucatan.

Madame Alice Le Plongeon, who is to lecture in this country, has done much the same archaeological work for Yucatan that Miss Edwards did for Egypt. English by birth, and living the retired life of most of her young country women, she early manifested a taste for history and a desire to travel that were enhanced by her marriage to Dr. Le Plongeon, the noted traveler and archaeologist. Together they have explored Yucatan, undergoing constant hardships and dangers, and making interesting discoveries of the ruins of sculpture and buildings. Both have published books of travel.—New York Letter.

Planning for a Woman's Orchestra.

Miss Laura C. Langdon, who used to be Laura C. Holloway, and whose child, the Scidell society, has grown to be a strong and lusty organization, says of it that, while she gets the best music obtainable from the best men, she looks to building up in future the best women's orchestra in the world and having the best women leaders. A big opera house is one of her plans.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Sara Bernhardt is worth more to her managers alive than dead, for they have just placed $200,000 insurance on the life of Donna Sel. In addition her managers have also protected themselves against loss by allowing a lot of accident insurance agents to bet that Sara will not be disabled in voice or limb in her journeys through the United States.—Exchange.

The Cloud Cap Wayside Stages leave the house daily for Cloud Cap Inn during the season.

Dinners for Lodges, Parties etc., a specialty.
