Wm. Kennedy fell from the flume at Chewoneth last Saturday, breaking one of his legs. He fell a distance of 40 feet and that he was not more seriously injured is little short of a miracle. Dr. Brosius was called and reduced the fracture, leaving the patient as comfortable as circumstances would permit.
It is gross carelessness to allow a team to stand in the street unhitched, no matter how gentle the horses may be. Something is liable to happen at any moment to frighten them, and even though no damage should occur, the horses are taught a bad trick. It only takes a moment to tie a team, and there is no time put to better use than that expended in preventing a runaway and ruined horses.

A MILLION FRIENDS.

Indian summer is again with us—at least the Indian is, and in the person of our old and esteemed friend of Ramesisid, now on file in the British museum, Cultus Dave. Some scientist in the art of nomenclature supplied Dave with the prenominal "Cultus," and it fits him without a wrinkle. Dave was born when the moon was full, a great many years ago, and no doubt his life has been prolonged that the reason for his coming into the world might appear. If he lives until it does, when Gabriel blows in his last trump Dave will still be the right bower and on deck. He is a character without one, a splendid specimen of the tribe of swash that caused the inspired poet to write, "Loathe poor Indian," and so forth. Dave can give a professional pointers on begging and can do nothing with less effort than any perpendicular animal we ever saw. He told us, confidentially, that General Wright threatened to hang him forty years ago if he ever caught him doing anything again, and so frightened him that "he has not done anything since." Dave is a cheerful prevaricator, bland-smooth and childlike. For three years his manly form has been hidden from the public gaze behind our cast-off clothing, and as he begs some of our raiment while the remainder of the suit still serves us as a shield, he often passes as the editor. We cheerfully put up with little things like this, even to his swiping a subscription paid him occasionally by mistake; but when he gathers in an intimate friend of ours and explains his penchant for exaggeration by laying the blame on his newspaper clothes, he parts the last tether of our friendship. Henceforth, as the winter winds whistle through our garments, our friends will understand that it is not impudently that makes us wear old clothes, but a wild desire to freeze the ungrateful old salmon trap, Cultus Dave.

Old Hood Beats The World.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11, 1893.
Hon. E. L. Smith and C. P. Heald, Hood River, Oregon—Gentlemen: The apples sent by you from the Hood River fair were received several days ago in fine condition. We now have the finest display in the horticultural building, and we owe no small part of the credit to your efforts in sending us this splendid lot of apples. Hood River stands out alone as a wonderful producer, and I cannot say what we should have done if "Old Hood" had not responded so readily, and with such great generosity. We are very busy and can scarcely find time to address our correspondents. Our tables are world beaters now, and I think this will continue to the end of the fair. If you should see anything especially large and nice, send us. I am yours truly,
JAY GUY LEWIS.

At the Locks.

Work at the Cascade Locks is being pushed rapidly. Tuesday, in company with Mr. George Morgan, the book-keeper for the contractors, we went over the works. An immense amount of stone has been cut, and 120 stone-cutters are now at work. A large section of wall is covered with busy masons, placing the stone and concrete, and a large gang are at work excavating. If the contractors have a fairly good season next year, the locks will be completed according to contract.

Mr. Pealer Hurt.

Saturday afternoon Mr. Pealer's team ran away, starting near Mrs. Fulton's place. One of the horses began to kick, knocking one of the traces loose, and then they started down the grade towards town. Mr. Pealer held on to the lines manfully and managed to guide the animals past a couple of teams in the road, but with the heavy grade and no brake, he was unable to hold them. Crossing a small culvert near E. L. Smith's residence the wagon became uncoupled and the bed was thrown high in the air. Mr. Pealer fell on his head and shoulders, receiving a bad cut and breaking one of his ribs. He was carried into Mr. Smith's house and his injuries attended to and towards evening was taken home. Those who saw the accident say they thought Mr. Pealer was killed and look upon his escape as little less than miraculous.

A Bad Runaway.

Saturday morning a team belonging to Mr. Ordway was left standing unhitched in front of Rand's store, and as a result a bad runaway occurred. The horses at first starting were not frightened and moved slowly until they had turned the corner at La France's, when they began to move more rapidly. Passing up Second street, they ran between M. H. Nickelsen's house and an oak tree, the wagon striking the fence and sending the now thoroughly frightened animals off on the run. They turned down the state road and in front of Mrs. Oiler's ran into an oak tree. One horse had a hind leg broken above the knee and had to be killed.
