Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Origin of a Famous Saying.

Euclid, who is sometimes called the father of mathematics, taught his subject in the famous school at Alexandria. Being asked one day by the king of Egypt (Ptolemy) whether he could not teach him the science in a shorter way, Euclid answered in words that have been memorable ever since, "Sure, there is no royal road to learning." Not many scraps of conversation have lived, as this reply has, for nearly 2,300 years.—Exchange.

Great Field For Science.

A learned French scientist, teaching the one from Professor Garner's investigation of the monkey language, has turned his attention to the vocabulary of chickens. If he can only find the spring pullets to tell their eggs, he will have lived in a—Augusta Chronicle.

Teach children to say, "Yes, mother (or father)," and "No, mother," and to say, "Yes, sir or madam," to old people or to those who adhere to the old ways of speech.

BOYHOOD TRADITIONS

HOW SCIENCE HAS RUTHLESSLY PLAYED HOB WITH THEM.

Even the Horsehair Snake is Declared by the Naturalist to be a Humbug—Still Clinging to That Belief and Presenting Pretty Good Arguments.

Science plays hob with the fond traditions of rural schoolboy days. How many ugly but useful toads have been left in undisturbed possession of a garden bed because to handle them was not to cover your hands with warts and to kill them would force your cows to let down bloody milk? What boy would have crushed a cricket, assumed as he was that its mate would come at night and avenge its death by eating up that rash boy's clothes? What man lives to-day who, as a rustic lad, has not held the stilted, daddly-long-legs prisoner by one hairlike shank and informed the globular insect that unless it forthwith pointed out the way in which the left cows had gone instant death awaited it, and when did daddly-long-legs fail to raise one slender leg and indicate, according to boyish belief, the direction the straying line had gone? And the devil's darning needle, that big eyed thing that lived and prowled for nothing else than to sew your ears up, and the magic eel skin tied round your leg, or neck, or arm, to keep the cramps away when you went in swimming, and the snake that swallowed its young, and greatest of all, that wretched fry from a horse's tail, wringing and gyrating in the roadside mud puddle, the horsehair snake.

But science has stepped in and solemnly and seriously said that these are all myths. It is a shattering of idols, but I fear that to science must be granted all it denies about them, except as to snakes swallowing their young. I have been an open mouthed and wide eyed witness of that interesting trick too often to let even profound scientists stand up and declare that it isn't so.

I hold out a little, too, for the horsehair snake, for I have in my mind a certain vagrant horsehair that I once put in an oyster keg filled with rainwater, and either that horsehair in the course of a few weeks took on the semblance of life and form of a horsehair snake and kept it up all season in a bottle to which I transferred it, or else it disappeared, and the germ of what we supposed was a horsehair snake happened to be in the water and developed there. I have always insisted that I made a horsehair snake. I have heard many voracious persons declare that they have done the same thing.

"But you are all wrong," says Nicholas Pike, the naturalist. "The horsehair snake, or hairworm, is the Gordius aquaticus, and it is common in most fresh water ponds and rivulets. Though no larger around than a coarse cotton thread, they have two mouths, one on each side of the head. They lay scores and sometimes thousands of eggs. The eggs are deposited in strings, like a chain, on the sides of shallow ponds or creeks, and they are greedily swallowed by various aquatic insects. Then from the time the egg is hatched the first part of the worm's nutriment is spent as a parasite, absorbing nutriment from the body of its unlucky host. The large water beetles are subject to these parasites. They have been found in a cricket. They are graceful swimmers, but when taken from the water they twist themselves into such an intricate knot that it is almost impossible to unloose it. They are called Gordius from this, the Gordian knot.

"I have no doubt that one reason why the idea of the horsehair snake has been propagated is from ignorant persons who have had various insects in clear water watching them for study or curiosity. Knowing that they put in only certain live creatures, and some day finding these live worms, they were astonished. The chances are that the worms were developed from a pet beetle that in its native pond made a feast on some ova of the Gordius, to be paid dearly for later when these hatched."

But there was no pet beetle or any other insect in my keg of rainwater. The horsehair went away, and the snake or worm appeared. I don't believe the horsehair ever swallowed any Gordius ova. I can't imagine any reason why a horsehair should turn into a snake or worm when kept in the water, but why not a horse's hair as well as a cow's hair or a deer's hair? Science had better not tell any of the few old settlers of northern Pennsylvania or any other locality where the pioneers were frequently their own tanners that cow's hair and deer's hair will not turn into worms under certain conditions or science will get a black eye. In the pioneer days, when a settler wanted leather for boots or shoes, it was not an uncommon thing for him to make a vat by hollowing out a pine log, and using wood ashes instead of lime in removing the hair. When the hide was taken out of the vat it would be covered with a fine film of worms. I have more than once heard the sons of such pioneers tell of finding curious worms swimming about these hides where they were lying in quiet pools. These worms were about two inches long, somewhat thicker than a cow's hair, and always in various stages of development from the hair as it came off the hide, some being for a part of their length simply hair, while the rest was the living worm, white and semitransparent. Some would be still fast to the hide, but wiggling to get loose, while they would swim about with a hair for a tail. These worms were never seen except in the pools with the hides, either cow or deer. The more I think of these well authenticated cow hair worms the more I am inclined to defy science and hold out for the horsehair worm.—New York Sun.

FAR AND WIDE.

Not on this broad continent alone, but in marvellous tropical regions, in Guatemala, Mexico, South America, the Isthmus of Panama and elsewhere, Howler's Stomach Bitters affords to infants and squirmers protection against malaria. The bitter, the freshly arrived infant, the fever of the virgin soil newly robbed of its forest by the axe of the pioneer, and the superstitious folk who prefer a preventive against the poisonous miasma which in hot climates is so fatal to infants, is yet fertile in disease. It embitters disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, fortifies those who live in malarious climates, and is fortified by outdoor exposure. It gives general warmth into a frame chilled by a rigorous temperature, and robs of their power to harm in the wild exerting miasma and various insects which these strengths the weak, and conquers ineffectual kidney trouble.

The greatest drawback to prohibition is that most of its enthusiasts talk as if they had been drinking.
