

Hood River Glacier.

HOOD RIVER, OR. FEB. 3, 1894.

SECOND TO NONE.

The winter is passing rapidly away, and a few weeks at most will see the spring work at hand for our farmers. Hood River has been peculiarly fortunate during the past exceptionally hard year. It had a large and profitable berry crop, its limited area of grain yielded abundantly, and its apple and other fruit shipments were the heaviest it has ever made. This is, however, but the beginning. The area in berries has been largely increased, and the season gives promise of being remarkably early. The thousands of young fruit trees coming into bearing will add largely to the general prosperity this year, and will soon place this section at the head of the list as a fruit producer. Now soon this will happen depends largely on the energy and push of our citizens. The whole valley will some day be an orchard, and to accomplish this result should be the aim and object of every person in it. Most of our people are land poor, having more than they can cultivate, and the making of many small farms of the large holdings is a necessity. Outside capital is needed, and men of small capital who can plant and cultivate ten or twenty acres are needed more. Ten acres in orchard will yield, after a few years, more money than 640 acres of wheat. This would give us a value equal to 64 times our actual area, if we were in a section devoted to wheat growing. In other words, as we have about 100 sections of good fruit land, it will give us as much money yearly as a good crop from a territory nearly 100 miles square. This is not only a possibility, but we have no doubt the actual results will go beyond this. When we add to this the immense body of timber that will find its outlet here, and the possibilities arising from the utilization of our splendid water power, it will be seen that ere long Hood River will be second to no inland town in the state.

TWO PUPS FOR A DOG.

The Corbett-Mitchell fight being over, the public took one long breath and then the dispatches began to come thick and fast about Corbett and Jackson. A farmer's wife once complained to her husband about his keeping a hound, and continued her complaints until he concluded to get rid of the dog. One day he came home from town and told his wife he had sold old "Tige." His wife was overjoyed, but astonished that Tige had value enough to be sold. She appreciated the matter, however, when told that he brought $50, paid with two hound pups at $25 apiece.

CALVIN S. BRICE.

Recent dispatches state that ex-Governor Campbell of Ohio is out of politics. This means losing a presidential candidate, but it must not be understood as leaving that state without one. The name of Calvin S. Brice, democratic senator from that very strong republican state, is frequently mentioned as a presidential possibility. Mr. Brice succeeded the venerable Allen G. Thurman in the senate, and not only took the place made vacant by the latter's retirement, but is filling it. He is one of the strongest business men in the country, having amassed a fortune by his own exertions, and is thoroughly conversant with the needs of the country. He is a man of great executive ability, and should the present chief executive desire to be relieved of the burdens and duties of his executive office at the expiration of his term, we know of no democrat who would bring to the office the high integrity, the loftiness of purpose and the executive ability of Calvin S. Brice.

The legislature elected in June will elect the successor to Senator Dolph, whose term expires in 1895. The fight on the legislative ticket will therefore be a hot one, and somebody is going to be surprised when the result is known.

There is a man named Pennoyer who is an unknown quantity in the equation, but we fancy the solution of the problem will leave Sylvester as the answer.

It makes the American heart swell with patriotic pride to read how "Admiral Benham sent a six-pound shell into the stern-post of a Brazilian insurgent's warship." This, we believe, is about the only shot that has been fired since the war, and probably the six-pound shell cost forty million dollars a pound, and it didn't damage the stern-post much either.

Paul Mohr is now ready to build the road from Columbus to Crate's point, so he says, and has the money to do it. We will take more stock in the story when the road is completed.

Mohr builds Grand Dalles railroads of the same material that O. D. Taylor builds bridges across the Columbia—paint and wind.

An exchange remarks that "Mrs. Lease is called an Amazon because her mouth is 300 miles wide." And the governor of Kansas is in it.

Avoid the sign "imported," avoid things "imported," avoid the tailor who carries nothing but "imported" suitings; avoid the shops that announce nothing but "imported" silks, the "imported" glassware, the "imported" china, the "imported" oriole-brace, the "imported" textiles; avoid the cigar dealer who would sell you only "imported" cigars, which may carry the taint of foreign countries; avoid the grocer who would sell you "imported" dried fruits, which may carry the germs of disease, and avoid the newspaper which teaches the "imported" idea and advocates free trade.—Economist.

That's the proper paper, but carry it to its legitimate conclusion, and let the balance of the world do the same, and barbarism would take the place of civilization inside of a century. "Avoid everything imported," avoid tea and silks, coffee and diamonds, sugar and furs; avoid woolen clothing and cling to shoddy; avoid the foreigner and the immigrant; avoid tinware and foreign books, and while you're at it, avoid the Bible, because it was not written by a protected American. In the meanwhile the balance of the world, following the same course, will avoid American wheat, American iron, American cotton. They will shun our manufactured articles and flee as from a pestilence from our raw materials. Civilization is the result of trade, and trade means an exchange of commodities. If we would sell our wheat, our cotton, our agricultural implements, to the balance of the world, we must take the products of the country to which we sell to pay for them, or some other country must take them and pay the coin, or trade ceases. Besides, if this theory is correct, where is the revenue to come from, and why not put the tariff on all articles at once at prohibitive figures? Avoid everything imported, and let our foreign brethren avoid everything American, first and foremost, the great American hog.

Senator Boyd of Colorado recently stated that Col. A. C. Fisk had never earned an honest dollar. Fisk challenged him to fight a duel, but is now satisfied the senator having written him a letter and although he refuses to make it public, it is presumed that the senator explained to the colonel that he only meant that he had been paid in silver.

The Wilson bill passed the house Thursday, by a vote of 214 to 140. It is stated that fully 20,000 people were present, and determined to gain admittance.

Controller Eckels has decided to accept the resignation of Lionel Stagg, as receiver of the Oregon National. No Portland man will be appointed.

NEWS NOTES.

The Bell telephone patent has expired and they are now free to every one.

The special election for two congressmen in New York, Tuesday, resulted in the election of one democrat and one republican, the latter being elected in a strongly democratic district.

Bourke Cochran made his most famous speech on the tariff question Tuesday, his argument being against the levying of an income tax.

The Colorado state senate wants the governor to bring the session of the legislature to a close, but as the house is doing some work, he refuses. The senate utterly refuses to act.

Senator Teller of Colorado made a long speech in the senate Monday, advocating the annexation of Hawaii.

By order of president, bring your stock certificates with you. H. F. DAVIDSON, Secretary.

The St. Gaudens Shock.

That Mr. St. Gaudens, the eminent sculptor, recently passed off on the government of the United States a design for a world's fair medal which would not have met the approval of the chaste minded Bennett, late of the society for the suppression of vice, is a discovery whose sting is tempered only by the news that the offense has been discovered in time to prevent the spread of the pestilence outside of official circles at Washington.

The first eye that detected the lurking indecency in the St. Gaudens design was that of the snow-mind Senator "Bill" Chandler of New Hampshire—he of Roach contracts and counsellor-in-legislative minorities. They do not raise much art up in New Hampshire, except the art of dealing full hands from empty ballot boxes, but they know what morality is, and they would not let Queen Victoria cross their state line with a low-necked court dress on. Senator Chandler showed the awful design to Senator Vilas of Wisconsin, in whose beautiful metropolis beer, cream bricks and purity form a symphony of virtue. Mr. Vilas was shocked. "I am no judge of art," he exclaimed, "but I am satisfied that it is not artistic and I know that it is disgustingly indecent."

As an amateur in art and an expert in indecency, Mr. Vilas called upon the treasury department to suppress the medal. His demand was backed by strong expressions from senators from Alabama, Iowa and Illinois. This consensus of opinion was promptly concurred in by Secretary Carlisle of Kentucky, and the sculptor was asked to furnish another design with more clothes.

The exact nature of the indecency against which senatorial virtue has thus risen triumphant has not been specified, but it appears to be found in the representation of a man without anything on. We regret to say that Mr. St. Gaudens is addicted to this sort of thing. His original Diana on the tower of the Madison-square garden in New York wore a costume reprehensibly light for a cold climate. When that was taken to Chicago he modeled another. The new one does indeed wear a scarf, but as it merely hangs from her wrist and is held as far away from her as her length of arm will permit it to go, it would really be of very little service in checking the blushes of Senator Vilas or ex-Senator Bennett. Mr. St. Gaudens ought to stop. He should not flatter himself that because his audacious figures are good enough for New York they will be tolerated in the chaste art circles of Wisconsin.—S. F. Examiner.

Rear Admiral Benham, commander of the U. S. fleet in Brazilian waters, makes the following report of an incident that came near precipitating a naval battle at Rio Janeiro last Friday:

"The insurgent forces on Cobras Island last Friday fired upon a ship flying the United States flag. I protested to Admiral de Gama against this action, and his response was that he had warned the commander of the ship when at the bar at Rio as to the whereabouts of the danger line. I ordered De Gama to cease firing. Both the guns on the island of Cobras and the guns of the insurgent warship Trajano opened fire Saturday on the bark Agate, a vessel sailing from New York. I warned De Gama at once that if the fire were repeated I would fire back. I also warned him if he touched an American ship or American goods I would consider him a pirate. I told him I would protect American property from the fire of his guns and that I should retaliate upon him for any damage done, unless it was obviously apparent that the damage was due to chance shots."

Admiral Benham further says that he notified De Gama, unofficiously, that the firing by the insurgents upon the wharves for the purpose of merely creating terror and to prolong the blockade would not be permitted, so far as Americans and American vessels were concerned. To this communication the insurgent admiral made no answer.

"For Years,"

Says CARRIE E. STOCKWELL, of Chesterfield, N. H.: "I was afflicted with neuralgia severe pain in the lower part of the chest. The feeling was as if a ton weight was laid on a spot the size of my hand. During the attacks, the perspiration would stand in drops on my face, and it was agony for me to make sufficient effort even to whisper. They came suddenly, at any hour of the day or night, lasting from thirty minutes to half a day, leaving as suddenly; but, for several days after, I was quite prostrated and sore. Sometimes the attacks were almost daily, then less frequent. After about four years of this suffering, I was taken down with bilious typhoid fever, and when I began to recover, I had the worst attack of my old trouble I ever experienced. At the first of the fever, my mother gave me Ayer's Pills, my doctor recommending them as being better than anything he could prepare. I continued taking these Pills, and so great was the benefit derived that during nearly thirty years I have had but one attack of my former trouble, which yielded readily to the same remedy."
