Waking Up Freezing Sleepers.

One of the principal duties of the Russian policeman is to awaken those unfortunates who have fallen asleep in the streets during a hard frost. These are usually either the isvoschik in his sledge, waiting for a fare and dozing off ere that fare comes into the sleep of lethe, or drunken men who have tripped and fallen on the pavement and have not the energy to get up again.

The orthodox method of awakening such sleepers is to rub their ears not willing that her name be given, violently backward and forward-a plan specially to be recommended, striking experience. What We Owe to Fire. It is worth while to note how few of the things, besides the fire on the hearth, that go to make up a modern fireside could ever have come into being except through the agency of the fire. Trace the origin of the book you have been reading in your cozy corner of the hearth. Speech itself is partly a growth and partly an invention, but were we not so. familiar with them we should bow our heads in awe in the presence of these wondrous arbitrary characters we call the letters of the alphabet, by means of which we represent thought and speech, so that ideas are preserved age after age. We look at these characters and straightway in our minds are reproduced the speculations of Plato, the poetical imaginings of Virgil or the teachings of Jesus.

Through picture writing, hieroglyph, such figures as children play with and call the rebus; by steps like these-and the steps were many centuries-the race climbed to the attainment of a phonetic alphabet. Then at last, after the beneficent fire had helped men smelt and shape the stubborn iron the movable type was invented, and all the thoughts of the world are the common property of any who will learn to read. Measure the distance from the hut of the barbarian to the fireside of a modern home, and you measure the total advance that man has made in civilization.-Rev. M. J. Savage in Peterson's Magazine. What Sleep Is Scientifically.

The great German scientist, Herr Rosenbaum, says that the anemic condition of the brain is due to an excess of water in the cells of that body-a sort of water on the brain. Sleep, according to his theory, is especially a matter of nervous actionthe fatigue of the nerve cells which communicate with the heart and bring about a change in the circulation.""The nervous cells are full of water when sleep comes on, which during sleep passes into the venous blood as waste, while the nerve cells receive nourishment from fresh arterial blood. When the process is entirely, over the sleeper awakes, unless
