Our editor agreed to leave out all the advertisements for one week to make room for an article on Man, if one of the lady readers would agree to pencil the same. While I admire the heroism that prompted such a noble sacrifice, I will endeavor to crowd my ideas concerning the lords of creation in a much smaller space. Doubtless he has already repented of his rash promise made in a moment of self-forgetfulness. EXAMINING A WITNESS.

How General Butler Discredited the Testimony of a Conductor

General Butler as counsel for the plaintiff in a damage case against one of the Boston street railway companies, some years since, turned a point in his client's favor and won his case by an adroit and original move. The accident in question had taken place in a crowded street, and the testimony was contradictory and confusing. pointing to the bell punch suspended from the witness' neek "Bell punch," was the answer.

"And what is a bell punch?" innocently inquired the lawyer. And then followed a lengthy explanation

"And what do you do if a mistake done all a mother can do and the infant is made and you come out short when you and the machine are at variance?" was the general's query.

"They make us pay the difference." was the answer.

"Won't they take your word for it?" "No." "Well, if they won't take your word for a nickel they needn't expect this jury to believe you," said the general, and they didn't, for they
