Mazamas.

A meeting of interested parties was held in Portland on March 19th, 1894, to consider the practicability of organizing a mountain climbers' club during the ensuing summer. Committees were appointed to make all necessary arrangements, and the work has been carried forward energetically ever since.

It has been decided to meet on the summit of Mount Hood on the 19th of July for permanent organization, and a cordial invitation is extended to all mountain climbers and lovers of nature to be present. A typical mountain banquet will be spread. The list of charter members will be limited to such as are then and there present, and no one will be permitted to join thereafter unless he or she has climbed to the summit of a snow-capped mountain acceptable to the club. Charter members will pay $3 for annual dues; those joining afterwards will be charged $10 entrance fees. Mazama, the name selected for the organization, is the name for the American representative of the European chamois, and is found in the mountains of the Pacific coast. It is the best mountain climber in the country.

Those wishing to climb from Government Camp, on the south side, will drive from Portland, The Dalles, or other points, while Cloud Cap Inn, on the north, is reached by stage, leaving Hood River daily.

On Tuesday evening, July 17th, an old-fashioned bean bake will be given at Government Camp, to which all are invited. Wednesday, camp will be moved to snow line, in time to witness sunset in the Pacific ocean, over one hundred miles distant. The summit of the mountain will probably be illuminated on Thursday evening, so as to be seen throughout Oregon and Washington.

Browned.

Sunday afternoon last, as O. B. Hartley and Frank Davenport were walking into town on the railroad track through the old Stanley place, two miles east of town, they saw three boys playing in the water of a lake close by the Stanley barn. They had constructed rafts from railroad ties and were navigating the lake made by back water from the Columbia. The men saw that the boys were taking too many chances and warned them of their danger. Mr. Hartley and Mr. Davenport kept on their way, but had not proceeded far when two of the boys came running after them, saying that the third boy, Roby Ortway, had 13 years old, had fallen into the lake. The men hurried back, but arriving at the lake found that the boy had sank out of sight. They began at once to drag the lake, the water of which was found to be twelve feet deep in places and filled with boulders and brush. Will Sears coming along joined in the search and dived four times after the boy, finally finding it in twelve feet of water, after a search of four hours. The funeral took place Tuesday. It is a sad blow to the boy's mother, widow of D. K. Ordway, whose death was announced in these columns only a few weeks ago.

Hood River Bridge Reopened. Supervisor Prather has about completed his share of the work on the Hood river bridge, and teams will pass over it to-day for the first time since it was made impassable by the flood. ## Widows in the District.

The funny writers will have to revise their jokes, if the figures of the Census Office are correct. There is a good deal of danger that the District of Columbia will soon be pointed at throughout the country and cartooned in the comic papers as the haven par excellence for divorced people.

For it is a fact that the figures of the last census bulletin given to the public show that Washington City has more people in it per capita who have been through the divorce court than has Chicago, that bustling metropolis of the west, which has a world-wide reputation for the cheapness and dispatch with which the lawyers can vend asunder the bonds of matrimony that were supposed to be eternal when they were riveted at the altar.

The figures, that are reputed not to lie, are these: Chicago with a population of 1,099,850, has 1,640 men and women in its limits who have been married—that is, one divorced person to every 670 of the population. The District of Columbia, with a population of 230,390, has 460—446 men and 314 women—divorced people, or one in every 501 of the inhabitants. So the District carries off the laurels. Still, throughout the United States there is one divorced person to every 520 of population. But while this is a startling statement, there are a number of other communities that surpass the District in this respect.

The little Puritanical state of Vermont, for instance, with a population of 375,530, has 1,290 people who had to seek legal separation in order to maintain peace in the family. Virginia evidently has a climate better adapted to domestic peace than the District, for while it has seven times the number of inhabitants, it contains slightly less than four times as many divorced couples than does the capital.

Maryland shows up as still more staid, for its population is four and a half times as large as that of the District, though it has less than twice the number of divorced people as has the latter.

There is another peculiar thing about the District—its percentage of married people is less than that which prevails throughout the country. Taking the United States at large, and nearly 36 per cent of the inhabitants are married. In the District less than 33 per cent of the inhabitants have ventured upon wedlock. But more alarming than any of these figures is the presence of widows in the District. There are actually 13,929 widows there—dashing or otherwise—or one for every 161 of the population.

These figures appear to be very large when it is considered that throughout the United States the number of both men and women who have lost their partners in life do not number more than 1 to every 21 of the inhabitants. Yet in the District the widows move around in society at the rate of 1 to 161.

An interesting study is brought up in the effort to discover why it is that the District has more than its share of divorced people, widows and unmarried inhabitants. It is answered very easily by the fact that one-half of the employes of the government are women. There are great numbers of widows of soldiers who were killed in the war who have sought this city and been successful in securing lucrative government appointments. Then there are thousands of young ladies who get places in the departments and conclude that it is better to hold them than to give their hearts to some fellow whose salary in their estimation is not more than enough to support themselves.—Washington News.

The Oregon Lumber Company have extended their flume across the railroad to the river bank at Haynes' Spur. Tuesday about 100 feet of flume on the high trestle just below the Haynes' hill was blown down, and before the water was shut off, two fir trees about two feet through were washed out. The company will rebuild their store at Chenoweth.

Only the Scars Remain.

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc.," writes LARRY HUDSON, of the James Smith's Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., "none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old mother urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."
