The Hood River fair will be late this year on account of the lateness of the season. Apples seem to be slow about coloring and maturing. It is thought best by some to hold the fair in October, in time to get our exhibit placed in the Portland exposition during the last week.

"When in Rome do as the Romans do," says the old proverb, and we might add, when in Hood River do as the Hood Riverites do. Call at Columbia Nursery and see what an assortment of fruit trees and plants can be had for a home garden. The best is none too good for the fruit growers.

We were shown through the garden of C. J. Hayes Sunday. Mr. Hayes has two acres of land bought of Oscar Stranahap, on the old base ball grounds. It was supposed at one time that this land was good for nothing without water, but Mr. Hayes has proved that it is the best of land for garden truck. He had a fine lot of sweet corn, beans and potatoes grown without irrigation.

Black woodpeckers are destroying a great many apples in the orchards on the East Side. Chris Detlman employs a boy in his orchard to shoot the birds and pays 5 cents apiece. United effort should be made to destroy these birds during the breeding season. They peck into and spoil the green winter apples as well as the ripe summer and fall apples, and are more destructive in some orchards than the codlin moth.

Grant Evans was fishing in Hood river, above the bridge, last Tuesday, when he caught a salmon on his hook. Before he could haul in his line the salmon escaped and his hook caught a trout, and before he could secure the trout it managed to wriggle off, and his hook caught a white fish before he had hauled in his line. And it wasn't a very good day for fishing, either.

A band of sheep were reported on the head of Neal creek Monday. A committee of citizens from the East Side went up on that day and notified the herders that they would have to move. A man was sent again on Wednesday to see if they had moved, and if not they will receive some help to move their camps from the citizens of the East Side.
