FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1896.

The St. Louis Republic, one of the few leading papers of the country that supported Bryan, and the result in Missouri shows that its efforts were successful, has dropped free silver since the election and is doing its best to help along the good times promised by its late adversaries in the event of Mc-Kinley's election. Following are the headlines of three long articles in last Saturday's paper: "A General Return to Business that has been Neglected; Mills and Factories will Run Overtime to Fill Old Orders; Political Excitement Past; The Revival is not Confined to any One Section of the Country; All Industries Attected." "Yellow Metal Again Shows its Face Everywhere; Employers Teaching a So-called Object were Hoarded being Transferred to the Interest - paying Institutions; Some Subtreasury Figures." "Up Goes Wheat, with Cotton and Corn in the Wake; 84 cents a Bushel Reached Yesterday, with a Prospect of Higher Prices; General Advance in Stocks; Government Bonds are Strong and a Healthful Activity is Everywhere Exthe election gracefully and have gone to work to do all in their power to help This is in striking contrast with the conduct of the republican press four years ago, which predicted dire calamity to befull the country under Grover. It is an angury of a hopeful and happened to the proper presentation of their cause to the ready to drop." Bryan is not dead yet, and even if he were, he has kindled they appealed to reason instead of prejudice, to patriotism instead of cupidity.

It is an angury of a hopeful and happened to the fires and the wheels will run. Men are learning to think, and the near future may hold possibilities little dreamed of as yet.

N. ETSBA. Cleveland's "free trade" administra-tion. Their calamity howls at that managers of a great party decide to intion. Their calamity howis at that time, and later, when the Wilson bill was passed, would put to blush the most ardent populist. We still live under the Wilson tariff law, with no under the Wilson tariff law, with no prospect of its being repealed in the next two years, and still there are signs of returning prosperity.

The popular vote gives McKinley about 1,000,000 more votes than Bryan. Yet the change of about 25,000 in nine states that gave a small majority each for the successful candidate would have elected Bryan. Suppose there had been these changes from McKinley to been these changes from McKinley to Bryan: California, 2,510; Delaware, 1,-255; Indiana, 11,100; Kentucky, 251; North Dakota, 2,510; Oregon, 1,505; South Dakota, 151; West Virginia, 6,-delaying from overy segion of the South Dakota, 151; West Virginia, 6,- delegations from every section of the 010; Wyoming, 101—a total of 25,393. These changes would have given every one of the nine states to Bryan, and, wilding their votes to Bryan, and, wilding their votes to Bryan, and, wilding their votes to Bryan, and representing nearly every form of productive industry. These visitations have been continuous and adding their votes to the 167 he got eisewhere, would have made his strength in the electoral college 227, or three more than needed to make him with special reference to the needs of with special reference to the president.

Tribute to the Defeated Chieftain.

GLACIER: Now that McKinley is elected, and Nature, after crying her eyes almost out about it, is slowly putting on her night-cap preparatory to her long sleep until next spring, I want to say a few words about the great chief cept that your praise of the GLACIER who went down in defeat after one of is more than it deserves. When we the fiercest political campaigns ever waged in this or any other country since civilization and civil government first begun. They say that "history repeats itself," and perhaps it does, for thousand fold, that man is William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska. If Bryan were to die today—and, thank God, he is not dead, and they dare not mob him as they did the noble Gracchus—he would be today—and they dare not chus—he would be today—and they dare not mob him as they did the noble Gracchus—he would be today—and they dare not mob him as they did the noble Gracchus—he would be today—and they dare not mob him as they did the noble Gracchus—he would be today—and they dare not make the today—and they dare not make they did the noble Gracchus—they are not mands, chilblains, corns, and all skin cruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. As an orator, and a true blue, whole-souled patriot and triend of the common people, he stands with no superior and with very few equals. No other man that ever lived has ever enlisted the love, confidence and adoration of the people among whom he labored to a greater extent than did Bryan. Not even our own Washington nor the great Napoleon ever elicited greater enthusiasm among previous campaign ever appealed with their followers than did the earnest and such forceful directness and power to fervid utterances of Bryan among the fervid utterances of Bryan among the suffering and down-trodden poor who heard him. Well might it have been said of him,

" A frame of adamant, a soul of fire, No dangers daunt him, and no labors tire."

But, as waged against the money power, it was a forlorn hope from the first; it was like Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, the grandest effort of its kind in history but doomed to defeat,

Republican Poetry. BY THE BARD OF NEAL CREEK. (Tune of "Rosin the Bow.") When the democrat party came to us We mourned for our country full sore, For we knew that the gaunt wolf of hunger Would soon be on guard at our door. We want to see business reviving, The laborers getting their bire; And we want to see every cold furnace Lit up with a bright glowing fire.

Chorns-Then we'll sing a loud welcome and hearty We've sighted the evergreen shore; For the grand old republican party Has been resurrected once more.

The flag of our country is trailing In the democrat slough of despond, And our eyes have grown weary with watching To see the bright vista beyond. will come when our trumpets of victory Have sounded from inland to shore; And republican voters have rallied To drive the gaunt wolf from the dcor.

Chorus-Then we'll sing a loud welcome and hearty, And joy in that fortunate hour, When the grand old republican party Once more has got back into power, -CARSON C. MARIKER.
