Scenery Along the Columbia.

Few persons who have always lived in Oregon realize that our state contains some of the grandest scenery in the world. Mr. H. H Shank of Hagerstown, Maryland, contributes an article en the wonders of the Columbia river, with illustrations, from which we extract the following in regard to scenes in our own neighborhood: "The traveled American whose journeyings have not been confined to the Old World, but include (as they seldom do) a tour among the natural wonders of his native land, is impressed with the inconsistency of those people who roam, year by year, among the mountains, lakes and rivers of Europe, and neglect the natural beauties of their native land. Majestic and imp e sive as the Alps may be, they do not lift their heads any more grandly than the summits of the Rockies, the Cascades or the Sierras; and nowhere are they clad with such a wealth of noble verdure as is spread about the base of our Western mountains. The Rhine may seem to sweep in stately fashion beneath beetling cliffs and bills that soar loftily above its waters, but in the presence of the awe-inspiring heights and depths and changing shadows of the 'Gorge of the Columbia River,' the Rhine becomes an insignificant memory, and the mind's sence of dimension is baffled in the effort to take in this infinitely greater, nobler and unfamiliarity of the topic. The little childmore majestically beautiful Rhine of our native land.

All too little known by the tourist is the land 'where rolls the Oregon;' and those Eastern travelers who chance to spend a few weeks under its cloudless | timber fires, I have seen the cruel flames summer skies, where the atmosphere is so clear that mountain peaks which are over one hundred and fifty miles distant from the spectator stand out with clear cut profile, and on every side the eye roams easily over unwonted breadth and distance of landscapesuch travelers experience a sense of novelty and change which the mere summer trip to Europe can never awaken.

""The Gorge of the Columbia' is the name given to a great natural rent in the wall of the Cascade Mountains, through which the Columbia river finds its way to the Pacific Ocean. In places the towering walls of rock rise for thousands of feet all but perpendicularly from the edge of the waters. Elsewhere the slope is more gradual and the inclination will be maintained with remarkable regularity from the shores of the river to an altitude of of county secretary, Mrs. Ersula Dukes; report many thousands of feet. ent to have heard the exercises under the efficient management of Prof. Miller, assisted by Miss Graham and Miss Stevens. It is evident the standard of the school is being raised, and with the co-operation of the directors and patrons, we have today (notwithstanding the sleep of months last year) a school of which we may well be proud, and such a school is sure to be as potent a drawing card as imperishable strawberries or big red apples. But even if this condition should not influence a single family to move into our midst, we can not afford to have any other condition, for our boys and our girls are just as good as anybody's boys and girls, and they are saying to us, Give us the best, and the best is better than we were able to secure twenty or thirty years ago. The exercises were appropriate, and, with a few exceptions, were well rendered. Some of the older pupils that showed ren, as is generally the case, did excellently well. Here, in the heart of the Cascades, on the Columbia river, we are apt to attach too little importance to the culture and preservation of timber. Sometimes there are too many acres of "slashings," too many careless leap a hundred feet above the tops of the tall trees in flendish glee and rush on with the voice of thunder over the mountain, leaving behind charred trunks and utter desolation, and these fires were the result of malicious carelessness. The article on 'Our Forests,' by E. N. Blythe, deserves special mention. number have requested that it be published, which I hope will be done, because it is worthy and should be read by those who vere not present,

The Log of the Mayflower. Portland Dispatch

The log of the good ship Mayflower is to be presented to the United States. For something like three hundred years it has been lying in a vault in the consistory court of the diocese of London. While rejoicing that this famous log book is to be in our procession, let us not overlook the fact that it will smash a whole lot of family records. To be able to trace one's ancestry back to a Mayflower passenger gives one a right to elevate his chin and wear a look of supreme indifference. A great many people have claimed the ability to trace their ancestry back two generations at a time without jumping a member now and then who decorated a tree or adorned a cell. When that famous old log book gets over here a whole lot of family trees are going to lose their bark and their limbs will fall off and decay.

The ladies and gentlemen who came over in the Mayflower were made of uncommon good stuff, but they had their faults. They were so earnest in their search for religious liberty that they decied it to others after they bad found it for themselves. It has been aptly stated that when they first anded they fell upon their knees, and after arising proceeded to fall upon the aborigines. They endured much, 'tis true, but so have we who came after them. We have had to endure the pretentions of those who seem to think that the possession of a Mayto think that the possession of a May-flower ancestor entitled them to the homage due a king or a plumber. The passengers on the Mayflower never had passengers on the Mayflower never had to endure the sight of a dude or pay tribute to a protected tariff baron. In some respects they had an easy time. They could worship God as they thought best, and could make others worship him the same way, regardless of conscience. The log book of the Mayflower will be a valuable addition to the relies of colonial days. But it the relics of colonial days. But it will shatter a great many traditions. It will reduce the number of claimants to Mayflower ancestry.
