Tuesday morning, at 1 o'clock, S. E. Bartmess received a telegram from the Oregonian office stating that congress had agreed upon resolutions declaring Cuba free and war on Spain. The news soon spread, the church bells were rung and kept ringing till daylight. Everybody in town was roused up and soon the streets were full of up and soon the streets were full of people. Powder was procured, and at daylight the big bowitzer was loaded and fired five times by several of the Grand Army boys. The shots were heard long distances in the country, and lots of people came to town early in the day to learn the news.

Customs in Turkey.

Our old friend Van Johnson informs us that the item in last week's paper in regard to how the people live in Turkey is incorrect. He tramped through that country in the early '60s and could write an interesting book of his travels. He says the same customs prevail in that country that were in vogue 2,000 years ago. The people adhere to the same dress, and in threshing never "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the No teams of horses, no wagons nor carts are seen. All carrying is done by packing on camels or burros. Flour is ground in the old-fashioned mortars by the women, and bread is baked in a sheet-iron oven, about two feet in di-ameter. The fuel used is the same as the early immigrants to Oregon, who came the plains across, would recognize as "buffalo chips." The bread is baked till it is well done and then turned over, like Mexican tortias. No dirt nor stones are baked in the bread; it is clean and palatable. Poor people pay no taxes; they are no better than slaves. The slave owners pay all taxes.

How to Cook Prunes.

"Not many housewives know how to cook prunes," said Henry E. Dosch, the well known horticulturist to a Times man yesterday. "Most of them put them on the stove and boil them, and the effect of the boiling process and the effect of the boiling process makes the prune skin so tough and leathery that it is difficult to cut or masticate. Only buy prunes which feel soft," he continued, "look fresh and alive, as it were, and when cut open are of a golden color. Wash them clean in warm water, place in a pot—porcelain-lined preferred—cover with water, and allow them to swell to near. water, and allow them to swell to nearly their size when fresh; then place on the stove. As boiling makes prunes leathery, and partly destroys their fla-vor and digestibility, they should be stewed at a slow simmer through the preparation of several meals—say two or three hours, adding occasionally a Mr. Frank Melvin and bride (nee Niedermark) are visiting in Hood River.
