Press Association's Annual Meet. The state press associations of Oregon and Washington met in regular annual session at Spokane, August 25th, 26th and 27th. The visiting editors, many with their wives and families, were there to the number of 200 or more. The city by the falls was ready for the occasion, and the Spokane press club welcomed their visiting brethren and extended them a royal reception during their three day's stay in town. Headquarters were established in the commodious rooms of the Symon's block, on Howard street. Carriages met the guests at the trains and their baggage was taken care of by men for that purpose, so the visitors were put to no trouble while in Spokane. The headquarters was gaily decorated with flags and bunting, and on the walls were the pictures of our president and the heroes of our late war. The Spokane people generously supplied an abundance of fruit, and cigars for the editors.

The Oregon state press association was called to order at 10:30 Thursday morning by President Geo. B. Small of the Baker City Democrat. The session lasted until 12; new members were elected and miscellaneous matters disposed of. An invitation from the Washington editors for a joint session was accepted, and the joint meeting was called to order at 2:30 o'clock. Chairman Jos. A. C. Brant of the Washington association called President Small of Oregon to the chair and turned the gavel over to him. President Small then delivered his annual address. He spoke pleasantly of the joint meeting and the benefits to be derived from such gatherings. Much of his address was given up to a condemnation of yellow journalism, his remarks on this point being met with hearty applause. He suggested the need of a change in the Oregon laws and the advisability of uniformity among newspapers in advertising rates. The Oregonians soon afterward adjourned to the headquarters room and held a brief session. Astoria was chosen the next place of meeting. Considerable discussion was aroused when J. S. Dellinger of the Astoria News suggested the advisability of securing a law from the next legislature fixing a uniform rate among the newspapers for legal advertising. A committee was appointed to frame a bill for that purpose and present the same to the legislature.

During this afternoon the ladies of the Northwest press association were given a musical reception by Spokane's ladies' matinee musical in the parlors of the Hotel Spokane. The ladies were entertained by the exceptionally fine musical talent of Spokane, and it was reported that fully 500 of the representative women of the Northwest participated.

In the evening the delegates were treated to a trolley party and given a free ride over Spokane's extensive electric railway system. With the end of the trolley ride the city's guests gathered in the handsome Auditorium, where was rendered a programme of speeches interspersed with music. Mayor E. D. Olmstead delivered the address of welcome on behalf of the city.

Thursday morning, at 8:15, a special train left the N. P. depot with a crowd of 300 excursionists bound for Coeur d'Alene lake. The lake was reached after a hour and a half's ride, when the passengers were transferred to the steamer Georgia Oaks, and a 25-mile ride across the lake enjoyed. The day was a little cloudy and cool enough to make the ride on the lake most pleasant. When the steamer landed, at 1 o'clock, tables were spread with three tons of provisions and dishes. Everything was in readiness, and the editors and ladies sat down to a royal feast. The viands were served in the highest style of the art, and such hospitality as was displayed by the Spokane press club would be hard to equal. Such a sumptuous layout was something new for the country editors, but they proved themselves amply for the emergency, and the way the edibles disappeared showed the ability of newspaper men to recognize a good thing when they see it.

On the return trip, various members of the press were called for and speeches made. Handsome souvenir menu cards of the banquet were distributed to all. After the return to the city in the evening many of the excursionists took cars for the Natatorium park, where a pleasant informal dance, under the auspices of the local press club, was held in the spacious pavilion.

Friday morning the Oregon press association held another meeting in the headquarters rooms. A proposition put forth by J. A. Douthit of The Dalles Mountaineer, providing for the establishment of a reliable advertising agency for the Oregon papers at Portland, the same to be under the management of the press association's secretary, met with considerable discussion and approval. Considering the immense expense involved in establishing an agency, Mr. Douthit asked that weekly papers give the secretary of the association (the agency's manager) 30 inches of advertising space a year, semi-weeklies 20 inches, and dailies 15 inches. He considered the higher prices to be obtained through the agency for foreign advertising would more than compensate for this space. The report of the committee on resolutions was then submitted and adopted as read. On behalf of the Oregon press association the Spokane people were thanked for their hospitality; the Spokane press club was tendered the association's thanks and appreciation for the attention given their guests; the Washington press association was congratulated for the fraternal greeting tendered the Oregon press association and ladies; tendered thanks to the various railroad managers for their generosity in supplying transportation to the members of the association and their ladies, and for other courtesies extended.

Col. E. Hofer of the Salem Journal presented a resolution commending the co-operation of the press of Oregon with the department of history of the university of Oregon in its labors of collecting and preserving materials for the sources of the history of Oregon, now being worked upon by Prof. F. G. Young of the state university. All available files of Oregon newspapers are asked to be turned over to the state university to form a part of the permanent historical records of our commonwealth. The resolution further provided that a committee be appointed to arrange for a celebration of the semi-centennial anniversary of the organization of Oregon as a territory of the United States, March 3, 1859. The session closed at 12 to meet again at 2 p. m.

With the calling to order in the afternoon, Chairman Small announced the election of officers to be next in order. The election was gone through with in a short time, the secretary being instructed to cast the association's ballot for the various officers. D. M. C. Gault of the Hillsboro Independent was made president; J. F. Stewart of the Fossil Journal, first vice president; A. N. Fisher of the Pacific Christian Advocate, second vice president. When the position of treasurer was reached, Chas. Nickell of the Jacksonville Times, former treasurer, Fred C. Baker of the Troutdale Champion, and Miss Jones of the Drain Watchman were placed in nomination. Miss Jones withdrew. This left the contest between Nickell and Baker. The result gave Baker a majority of two votes. Mr. Nickell then moved to make the election unanimous. Mr. Albert Tozier, the association's popular secretary, was re-installed with vigorous enthusiasm. Tony Nolter, the pioneer editor of Oregon, was elected historian. As is the custom, the retiring president, Geo. B. Small of the Baker City Democrat, was made sergeant-at-arms. There being no further business, Chairman Gault announced the meeting as adjourned sine die. Some one proposed three cheers for Spokane, and as the vigorous response died away in echo the '98 session of the Oregon press association became a thing of the past.

From the Boys in the Philippines. Following is part of an interesting letter from Clarence English to his mother, dated Cavite, Philippine Islands, July 29, 1898: "As the steamer Peking will leave tomorrow or next day for San Francisco, I thought I would write another letter to my best girl; so here goes. I would like to tell you just how the whole situation stands here, but I do not know myself. Gen. Merritt and the others in command do not say what they intend to do. We have been in these quarters just 29 days, and from reports I have heard, we are liable to stay here to garrison this place and not get a chance to go to the front. We are all anxious to have a hand in the fight if there is a fight. Most of the boys seem to think we will have more trouble with the insurgents than with the Spaniards, but I hardly think so, as they have a wholesome respect for the 'Americans' as they call us, and the Spanish warships lying all around in the bay is an object lesson not easy to overlook. They never had any show with the Spanish before Dewey came and destroyed Montojo's fleet. The way the insurgents fight they would not last any time at all in front of an army of Americans. They say that we Americans are 'snoccha bulinas,' which means very good or very strong. It is not spelled that way in Spanish, but that is the way it is pronounced. I have learned a good many Spanish words and think if we stay here long I will be able to converse with any of them. I have put in about a week at drafting on maps for the general, and I made a little rough sketch of our quarters for you and will inclose it in this letter. I sent you some curios and shells about a week ago by a man named George Brown, who was sick and went back to Portland. Dr. Brosius and the other Hood River boys sent some fine ones which they bought already polished by the natives, but I picked the ones I sent you myself."

Dr. Ellis just came along with a balloon fish. It looks for all the world like a balloon. There are some queer fish here, and all kinds of crabs, clams and oysters and also veils.

I am sitting now just back of the little square building you see in the left of the sketch. Our quarters are very comfortable, and we are well fed now. [Here follows a sketch of the ground plan of the building in which the soldiers are quartered.] There is a thousand of us quartered here and we have plenty of room. The grass is thick and green all over this country. Most of the yards are full of palm trees, but there is only a few small ones around our quarters. The country around Manila is covered with rice fields, which are all built up with little dikes of earth built up all around them to keep the water in.

We have a filter for our water. It is first boiled and then filtered. We use rainwater altogether, and we get plenty of it now, as it rains every day. The same kind of English sparrows you see every day at home are thick here, and also a large kind of mocking bird. A man named Countryman, who at one time worked for the Oregon Lumber Co. at Little White Salmon, is a member of our company; and Jamison, our first sergeant, was deputy United States marshal at The Dalles. The members of our company represent all trades and professions. There are carpenters, blacksmiths, machinists, druggists, lawyers, doctors, engravers, millers, jewelers, barbers, bakers and cooks, and you may be sure we make good use of the latter. We also have a few farmers.

We all wear light gingham shirts, checked, such as we sell at home for 50 cents, but not so heavy. We look like a lot of farmers but we feel comfortable, and that is all we care for out here among the heathen. I haven't seen more than six white women since we left Honolulu, and they were wives of some of the Spanish officers who were taken prisoners here; and they hardly look like white women. They are almost as black as the natives.

We have Salvation Army meetings here every evening. Just like they do in Portland. One of them came over in the ship with General Merritt. After retreat, every evening, some of us go up and sit on the top of the old fort which overlooks Manila and the whole bay and our fleet, which signals with colored lights and throws search lights all over the bay. Manila has a good electric light system and it looks fine at night to see it strung out along the shores, with all the ships signaling and throwing lights around. "The fleet of all nations," as we call the foreign ships, lies off to the north of Manila, and it is always lighted up in good shape. It is seven miles from here to Manila in a straight line, but about 25 to go around by land. The California troops are camped within seven miles of Manila, also some of the regulars and other troops. You could notice a great difference between the men of our regiment and the First California. They seem to be mostly small men and our boys look big and strong, like the regulars.

Southern Women at a Confederate Re-Union. Louisville Times. And the women! Those angels who once watched and prayed for the Johnny Rebs, who ministered in the hospitals and moved over the battlefields. They and their daughters were at Atlanta, the honored guests of the city. The Kentucky girl, like some dashing thoroughbred from the bluegrass uplands; the Louisiana belle, fair as an autumn evening or the magnolia of her beloved state; the stary-eyed beauty from the Mississippi; the "yellow rose" of Texas that beats the belle of Tennessee; the stately Virginian, queenlike in her looks and bearing as the daughter of a hundred ears; the lovely Alabamian; the Tennessee, sweet and fresh as the pink laurels from her mountain fastnesses; the Carolina queen, and the Florida siren, in whose ears are ever the song of the sea, and whose eyes mirror the cloudless blue of the skies. The whole South will break forth into her joys. Her hands are filled with roses and her eyes with tears. And as she stands with her beloved sons and daughters about her, far away on the breeze comes the sound of rejoicing at Santiago, where the glad light of the morning falls like a benediction on one flag, one country and one cause.

The Cuban "Patriots." An army officer recently returned from Santiago gives his opinion of the "patriots" in the Cuban army, as follows: "I went to Cuba believing that the insurgents were patriots engaged in a struggle for liberty. I was disappointed to learn that the Cuban soldier has no idea of what liberty means. The term in his mind signifies merely a license to kill and plunder at will. All the Cubans I saw around Santiago were either negroes or half-breeds. I do not believe there are 100 white men among the forces under Gomez and Garcia. The negroes are of the lowest and most brutal type. The idea of permitting these people to have a voice in the government of the island is absurd. Their elevation to power would mean nothing less than anarchy. The soldiers who braved the dangers of the Santiago campaign from motives of chivalry were chagrined upon their arrival to find that they had enlisted to fight for a lot of brigands, cutthroats and outlaws. I am satisfied that it will be necessary for us to exterminate the insurgents if we carry out our plan to give the islands a stable government."

H. P. Cone of Troutdale, who had his leg broken at his saw mill and is now in the hospital at Portland had to have the injured limb reset twice before it was satisfactory to the doctors.

Miss Gray, who has been the guest of Mrs. Alma Howe, returned to her home in Portland last week.
