FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1898.

The terrible suffering of the volunteers in the different camps from disease and neglect, and the frightful mortality among them, threatens to make our loss in human life greater than that of the enemy in the late war. Disease has killed more than bullets in all our wars. Mismanagement is the cause this time as it always has been heretofore. The blame rests somewhere, and the people will try to find out. The administration will of course be blamed, and the republican party, which until recently seemed to have everything going its way for success in the fall elections and the presidency two years hence, now sees defeat staring it in the face. The party cannot "point with pride" to the conduct of the late war, nor will it claim it as a republican war, as was attempted in the start. The party will find it hard to shift the responsibility or change the issue. The question of the war with Spain and its mismanagement so far as the neglect of the soldiers is concerned will enter into the campaign, and it is easy to see which party will get the worst of it, whether it deserves it or not. The decreased republican vote in Vermont shows which way the wind is blowing.

By the kindness of John Leland Henderson we were permitted to peruse bulletins 11 and 14 from the university of Idaho, the work of Prof. L. F. Henderson. Bulletin 14 treats of "Twelve of Idaho's Worst Weeds." The prickly lettuce, which has become a noxious weed in Hood River, is described and the farmers of Idaho are advised to make a united effort towards its extermination. In cultivated fields or meadows this weed should be cut down with the hoe below the crown or dug up. If mowed off the root sends out shoots, and a few days suffice for these shoots to get to seed. It is the worst weed we have ever had in Hood River, and some united action should be taken among our people towards eradicating it before it spreads further.

Gov. Lord has called the legislature to meet in extra session, September 20th. There is no excuse for a session three months ahead of the regular session, which convenes in January. If the appropriation bills could wait nearly two years they could wait three months longer. The republicans have an overwhelming majority in the legislature, elected to seat H. W. Corbett in the senate, and it ought not to take more than one ballot to decide the senatorial question. All that the taxpayers of the state have saved by the failure of the legislature to organize in 1897 will be squandered by the special session.

Mr. Fred C. Baker of the Troutdale Champion gives notice in his last week's issue that he will soon remove to Tillamook and take charge of the Headlight at that place. Mr. Baker is also postmaster at Troutdale and has forwarded his resignation. The Champion, which by the way is one of the brightest papers on our exchange list, will in all probability go out of existence when Mr. Baker removes from Troutdale.

W. T. Byars has resigned as editor of the Goldendale Sentinel and is succeeded by M. E. Miller, late of the Antelope Herald.

Chance for a Big Saw Mill.
Capt. P. S. Davidson of La Crosse, Wis., is here looking over the ground for the location of a saw mill that will cut about 10,000 feet of lumber an hour. Surveyors are at work, and if their report and other matters are favorable, the mill will be located on Mr. F. H. Button's farm on the east side of Hood River, and inside the corporation. A dam will be put in the river near the county bridge, and the saw logs will be driven down the river from the land owned by F. H. Button above the forks of the river. A tunnel will be cut through the hill at J. R. Reynolds's place and the logs floated through the tunnel to the low ground on Mr. Button's place, below the railroad. The location of the mill here hinges on the annulment of the franchise granted to the Hood River Lumbering company. Mr. Davidson has looked the ground over and is ready to put in his mill, but will not make a move toward it until assured that the river is free for driving logs. Capt. Davidson has six sons who, with their families, will locate here if the mill is built. He is an old-time mill man and has also been engaged extensively in transporting government troops and military supplies. At one time he owned 8000 canoes on the Missouri river and furnished the supplies for the military posts in Montana and the Dakotas. His boats ascended the Big Horn river and brought away from the battlefield the dead of the Custer massacre.

The Spokane Fruit Fair.
Spokane, from the 4th to the 15th of October, will be the gayest city on the coast. The annual fruit fair will have special days for the friends of the local specialties. The first day will be the day of P. day, and the grand chancellor of the state of Washington will be present. The Red Men, Shriners, Eagles, Elks, Odd Fellows and the press will also have each day devoted to their several orders. Many of these societies will have floats in the harvest festival parade, and the K. of P.'s expect to have the handsomest.

A Glimpse of Eastern Washington.

During our trip en route to Spokane to attend the meeting of the Northwest press association, and the week we spent in that part of the state, we gained something of an idea of the vast resources of Eastern Washington and the Palouse country, and we don't think we are going too far in saying that this land of marvelous natural wealth and resource is the greatest part of the Pacific Northwest (this of course doesn't mean that Hood River is not the best). As the GLACIER representative boarded the Spokane flyer a week ago last Tuesday, the mercury was playing tag with the dials in the 90s, making the trip to our destination void of incident or pleasure, but not of sand, dust and cinders. It is noticeable that the trains on both the O. R. & N. and Northern Pacific railroads are crowded with traveling people, which ought to be a good indication that the people of the Northwest have plenty of money to spend.

Spokane, the metropolis of Eastern Washington, is a modern, up-to-date city of 35,000 to 40,000 inhabitants. The business portion of the town is compactly built, and its seven and eight story buildings of brick and granite would do credit to the large cities of the East. The numerous handsome private dwellings speak well for the wealth of the city's inhabitants. The streets of the city are kept clean, and with a good street-sprinkling system there is no dust. Among the many handsome buildings of Spokane are the city hall, auditorium theater, Spokesman-Review building and the county court house, the latter being built of cream sandstone and completed in 1895 at a cost of $350,000. The city is well supplied with newspapers. The Spokesman-Review is the morning paper, gotten out with all the up-to-date facilities for furnishing the public the doings of the world in general. The Chronicle is an evening paper and prints two editions each day. It is the leading republican organ of the eastern part of the state.

Spokane, with its magnificent water power furnished by the falls of the Spokane river flowing through the heart of the town, and with the rich mining and agricultural regions round about, is destined to become a great manufacturing center. Already to a considerable extent is this power being utilized to operate flour and saw mills, while it also furnishes the power for the city's extensive electric railway and light system. The minimum motive force of the Spokane falls is estimated at 32,000 horse power.

Spokane is the largest railroad center on the Pacific coast. It has the advantage of three transcontinental lines—the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, and the Union Pacific in connection with the O. R. & N., and the extensive farming and mining products of the district extending for 200 miles in every direction are handled by the three local railroads—the Spokane and Northern, the Central Washington, and the DeSmet and Coeur d'Alene.

After the adjournment of the press association we took the Northern Pacific train for the town of Cheney, 16 miles southwest of Spokane, where we had the pleasure of a few days' visit with Hon. D. F. Percival and wife.

Cheney, situated in the midst of this rich grain country, is a town of 1500 people and has all the modern conveniences of a town ten times its size, such as electric lights, graded streets and sidewalks, and a hydrant water system costing $40,000. Its substantial brick business exhibit what a store of wealth comes to the support of the little city from the surrounding farm lands. Cheney has a brick public school building costing $18,000; a flouring mill, turning out 150 barrels a day; a creamery, that uses over 1,000 pounds of milk a day. The various religious denominations are represented by five churches. The town has two weekly newspapers, the Cheney Sentinel and the Free Press. We found Mr. Stewart of the Sentinel a genial member of the fraternity of the art preservative. His local weekly presents a neat appearance typographically, while its editorial columns reflect the wit and ability of their writer.

Cheney's citizens are congenial and intellectual, and many representative people of Eastern Washington make Cheney their home during the school months of the year, where their families secure the educational advantages offered by the town. A state normal school is located here. This school grew from the Cheney academy, established here in 1883. The normal school building, erected in 1895 at a cost of $60,000, is a handsome structure of red brick, and with its efficient corps of instructors is recognized as one of the leading institutions of its kind in the Northwest. The school last term had 300 students.

Hon. D. F. Percival, Cheney's leading and enterprising citizen, was one of the first settlers in Spokane county, locating here in 1872, while the savage Nez Percés were yet warring with Uncle Sam's troops for the possession of their hunting grounds. Mr. Percival is a veteran of the civil war. He first met the editor of this paper at St. Joseph, Mo., in the spring of 1866, from which point they together crossed the plains the same year with an ox train to the Gallatin valley, Montana. Four years later these two men met again in Portland. Mr. Percival for a number of years engaged extensively in stock raising, before the virgin soil of the bunch-grass plains of the Palouse country was turned by the plow. He was at one time county commissioner, when the county seat was at Fort Colville, and Stevens county spread from the Walla Walla valley to the line of British Columbia; he was twice a member of the Washington legislature, five times rejected mayor of Cheney, and declined further political honors to give attention to his business interests. In 1883 he engaged in banking, doing business under the name of the Bank of Cheney. In 1889 he established the First National bank of Cheney. But the financial depression of 1893, with the loss of the great wheat crops of '93 and '94 through destruction by rain and prevailing low prices, was very disastrous to the business men of Cheney. Mr. Percival worked incessantly for three years to stem the tide and keep his banks solvent, but in June, '96, the farmers were still unable to meet the obligations on their mortgages, consequently his business met with the inevitable and he was forced to close. The stockholders of the First National bank, through Mr. Percival's receivership, will soon have been paid in full, when he again expects to open in business.

The country surrounding Cheney is rolling and the soil is a dark, rich loam. Scattered tracts of pine forest intervene between Cheney and Spokane. Around Colfax, a pretty little town of 4,000 or 5,000 population, on the O. R. & N., about midway between Spokane and Walla Walla, the country is quite hilly and stretches of wooded landscape relieve the monotony of the wheat fields. The whole of Eastern Washington is an one big wheat field. The vast productive resources of this country ought to surely make it the richest section of the Union. The farmers, with their great wheat fields producing from 25 to 40 bushels to the acre annually, have their home tracts planted to orchards and garden. Their houses are substantial and comfortable dwellings. They are fast paying off their mortgages, and everything indicates that in a short time they will be free from debt and begin to pile up bank accounts. In the city of Spokane there is not an empty business house to be seen. A glance at the bank clearings will show that the city is fast recovering from the disastrous effects of the general crisis of '93. For the month of August, '98, the bank clearings of Spokane amounted to $3,195,630, an increase of $44,400 over the corresponding month last year, or an increase of $2,254,476 over the same month for '93.
