From the Boys in the Philippines.

Mrs. Geo. P. Crowell has received lengthy letters from her son, telling of the capture of Manila, from which the following extracts are taken:

MANILA, Aug. 16, 1898.—You have doubtless heard before this of Manila's surrender. The Stars and Stripes now float over the Philippines. We have taken possession in great shape. The insurgents wanted to enter the city after our troops and the fleet had taken it, and kill all the Spanish soldiers and loot the town, but our troops do not let them come in at all. They are allowed to go and come at will when not armed. Aug. 13th we of the first and second battalions, Oregon volunteers, turned out of our bunks at 3:30 in the morning and made ready for battle. We took 200 rounds of ammunition and two days' rations with us, and at 7 o'clock went aboard the Keweenaw, a side-wheel steamer, and steamed out into the bay with our warships, and about 9 o'clock we headed for Manila. We were to land right in Manila from the front, so you see we expected a hard fight unless the city should surrender before we landed. Our warships lined up in front of the south end of Manila and opened fire on their intrenchments at Malata. I saw every shot fired and it was exciting. I think the bombardment lasted about an hour. The American troops in the trenches attacked at the same time and fought them tooth and nail, driving them back towards the city. The Spanish soon ran up a white flag, the firing from the ships ceased, and we steamed up past the city and stopped off the mouth of the Pasig river, and at about 4 p. m. the governor-general surrendered. We landed at 5 p. m. on the jetty at the mouth of the Pasig, and found a Spanish gunboat on fire in the stream. They had set fire to it and scuttled it so it would sink and not fall into our hands, but our sailors went to work putting out the fire, and I guess she will not be a total wreck. We were marched to the governor-general's palace, where we found thousands of arms and equipments piled up like cord wood. The Spanish soldiers do not seem to care much and tell us that the Americans are good. I don't let them fool me; I have heard too much of their history. We slept that first night in the governor-general's palace. It is a grand palace, all marble and fine material, but our company were stuck back in the rear hallways and had to sleep on the floor. We didn't mind that, however. The next day we were moved to our present quarters, which are the best we ever had. Only three Americans were killed in the capture of the city. We were the first to enter Manila. I was on guard yesterday and last night in an old earthquake ruin, used as a government wood yard, and while talking to a native I found out where the Spanish had stored away a good many thousand dollars' worth of stores—25,000 beds, lots of blankets, uniforms, hats, rice, and all kinds of supplies. I reported the matter to headquarters and took the native along and had him show me the place. Gen. Merritt sent a squad of men there to take the stores and keep guard over them. I am getting so I can carry on quite a conversation in Spanish. That's how I came to find out the Spanish stores.

Aug. 18th.—We are now comfortably settled in our new quarters at the Plaza de Artileria, in old Manila. I bought a small shell purse from a Spanish soldier, yesterday, that he said he brought from the Suez canal. It has engraving and hand painting on it and will make a very pretty little souvenir. I send it, along with a few other things, to you. We are in full possession of Manila and have captured hundreds of tons of all kinds of ammunition and cannon and small arms. I never saw so many handsome women as there are here. We have had lots of hard work since coming to Manila, but now we will have it easier, I think. There are no large horses here that I have seen, but those here are the prettiest little horses you ever saw. All the carriages have low wheels and are built to match the horses, and they have a great many fine carriages. These small horses seem to be very strong and always go on the trot. The native police and the servants at the palace are covered with white braided cord and tassels of silver and walk around as straight as a cob. I have not had time to get acquainted with any of the ladies yet, but by the way they smile at us boys they don't seem to be very mad at us for whipping their men folks. This is a very old town and a large one. There are ruins and old walls everywhere that have been and are being large trees growing out of them. A fellow needs a good haversack to carry his small change in down here. This is one of your free silver countries, I guess. It takes a whole scoup full of the copper money to buy anything, and then you have only paid the small price which is about half as much as at home.

Aug. 21st.—I am still in the best of health, and we are having it a little easier at present. We took possession of the Spanish treasury building the other day. I was on guard there at the time the money was counted and turned over to Major Whipple, who has been appointed treasurer. The official Gazette, which has just been started at our headquarters, says that the Oregon regiment will be stationed here at headquarters inside the walled city. You see we are honored everywhere we go. We were the first to land at Honolulu, and would have been first at the Ladrones if the infantry had landed, and in fact they had two companies of our regiment nearly to shore when the place surrendered. We were the first to land in the Philippines and first to enter Manila, and now are picked out as the regiment to be stationed at headquarters. We have never had to fire a shot in battle yet, even only had one experience of much danger, and that was when we entered Manila. We were in transport steamer with Dewey's fleet during the bombardment and in full range of the Spanish batteries. If they had dared to fire they might have sunk the whole crowd of us. We entered the city as gay as ever and went marching along in front of the Spanish fort, whistling "Yankee Doodle" and "Marching Through Georgia." So you see we are not much afraid of the Spanish. The Spanish papers printed here commented on the fact and seemed to think that we did not fear them much. I will mail you a Manila paper containing Gen. Merritt's first proclamation to the people of the Philippines. We get all kinds of stories here about peace and armistice and other questions, but can place no dependence in any of them. They seem to try to keep us in ignorance of the affairs with Spain. It is on account of the Spanish here, I guess. Our quarters are clean, high, light and airy. I am wearing a pair of Spanish shoes that I found in our new quarters. They just fit me, and I am making good use of them. We can get our underclothes washed for 2 cents and socks for 1 cent in our money. You can ride in a hack for 30 cents for the first hour and 12 cents for every hour over. We captured about thirty Spanish ships in the Pasig river; most of them are coasting vessels of small tonnage. This city, especially the new part, looks just about like the pictures of the Chicago world's fair when you see it from the bay. Nearly all the buildings are white, with galvanized iron roofs, which also look white from a little distance. Sergeant Mercer, our first duty sergeant, carried the American flag into Manila. He is one of my best friends and one of the best soldiers in the regiment. I was picked as one of the guards for the treasury building the day we took it.

Snakes.
It should be borne in mind that, although "the war's all over and all is free from harm," the terrors and dangers of snakes seem yet far from banishment. Of course snakes have their place in "Nature's economy" and must be respected. The sacred history proclaims all things good that God made, and very soon discovers a snake's story, which also looks useful in giving us exhilarating surprises as well as materially cutting down the census lists and preventing overproduction. I can tell you the life of the snake is not so different from the life of the human as you would suppose. Texas is blessed with a good many snakes, perhaps not too many nor too few for preserving a healthy equilibrium, and it is natural that there should be many and varied experiences with them. Some grow to be as large around as a stovepipe or child's body, and some are as small as a pin. One of the largest I ever saw was a diamond rattler 7 feet long, 4 inches diameter, caught near some place last May, ornamented the front window of a dry goods merchant. Two rattlers killed recently in another county, one had 48 rattles, the other more, but the rattles were damaged by the shot exact count could not be made. Chiken snakes are most numerous and troublesome. One woman told me the other day that she had done no good this year raising chickens on account of their depredations. Racers, as is their characteristic elsewhere, think, seem to be in great hurry and don't care to be interviewed, and flash by without a friendly nod of recognition, or otherwise. "I'm not so with the dry and necessary. He stops and he says he wants to have a chat, but the interview is generally dissatisfactory to him. The king snake is the most rapid of all snakes, and is in constant combat with the rattler, if defeated, the joint snakes are put together in sections so they can unback at a will in emergency or when it would be impossible to do so otherwise.
