FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1898.

This is Thanksgiving day, a day observed throughout our land by generous hospitality and charity and good dinners. Hood River is a church-going community, and today the good people of our valley will heed the advice of our chief executive; they will cease from all labor and assemble at their places of worship and give thanks for the many blessings vouchsafed to us as a community and as a nation. Hood River has much to be thankful for in this year of 1898. Good health has prevailed among us; our young men who have gone to war have been spared from disease and the enemy's bullets; our crops have been bountiful; our markets fair; labor has been well rewarded;—everything has tended to make us a happy and contented people. We can give to our less fortunate neighbors with a willing hand and be happy in the consciousness of well doing.

D. M. Shoules of North Yakima writes to Ranch and Range his knowledge of the codlin moth. He has made a close study of this pest, having in view the planting of a large orchard, and has reached the conclusion arrived at by many of our Hood River orchardists, that the time to spray is after the apple is formed, and keep spraying at intervals while warm weather lasts. He says:

My observations lead me to the following conclusions: In the vicinity of North Yakima there is but one brood of the codlin moth, and that is a continuous one from about June 15th to November 1st. What I mean by that is that there is no day between about the dates named that the insect cannot be found in a badly infested orchard, in all stages from the egg to the matured moth. By close daily inspection in a badly infested orchard from the time of fruit bloom forward I found the first tiny worm, apparently just hatched and beginning to work his way into the apple on the 16th day of June, and on November 2d I found worms at work on apples in my orchard less than one-sixteenth of an inch long and probably not more than two or three days old at most.

Occasionally we hear some one say that our town should have sidewalks. Others again say that the beauty of the town would be spoiled if we had sidewalks, that the streets are too hilly, and the steps that would be necessary every hundred feet or so would be a nuisance. The GLACIER would like to see some provision made to light the streets at night, but would be opposed to putting property owners to the expense of laying wooden sidewalks. There are only a few days in the year when sidewalks are really needed. Generally, as soon as it quits raining our streets are dry. A plank walk along the state road as far out as the school house is badly needed, however. Children going to school should not be compelled to wade muddy roads while lumber is cheap and the expense of building a plank walk would not be great.

J. H. Ackerman, state school superintendent elect, at a recent teachers' institute in Benton county, produced a new idea for the arrangement of the grade system in the public schools of Oregon. He would do away with the present ten-grade system and replace it with a series of three grades, requiring pupils to fully complete the work in each grade before advancing to the next, and at the completion of the third grade, requiring pupils to pass an examination for a county diploma that would enter them to the higher schools of the state. Mr. Ackerman says such a system has proven successful in several of the states and is already being tried in a number of the public schools of Oregon.

A bill will be introduced in the Washington legislature to compel every able-bodied man over 21 to vote at general elections or pay a poll tax of $10. Such a law is needed in every state. The law should also provide a fine for not voting at the primaries.

The Oregonian is making preparations to issue on a grander scale than ever its mammoth New Year's edition. It is expected that it will be the best and most complete paper ever published on the coast.

A farmers' institute, under the auspices of the state agricultural college, will be held in Hood River March 3 and 4, 1899.

The Portland Dispatch of Nov. 17th was a very creditable illustrated number, containing a write up of Umatilla county.

The Hood River town election will be held Tuesday, December 6th.

Attorney John L. Henderson proved to be the savior of a good many votes at the Valley Improvement Co.'s meeting on Monday. Under the revenue law all proxies are required to contain a ten-cent revenue stamp. Mr. Henderson had been at The Dalles a few days before and laid in a supply of stamps. When it was discovered that stamps were necessary on the 43 proxies, Mr. Henderson was able to supply them; otherwise many shares would not have been represented.

The Frankton Institute.

The teachers' institute at the Frankton school house on the 19th inst. was one of those occasions that so favorably impress visitors to the valley with our people and the high order existing socially and intellectually. The wide-awake, progressive teachers of the neighboring schools were present and their methods of teaching different branches was shown in carefully prepared papers that called out words of approval or friendly criticism from the other teachers.

County Superintendent Gilbert presided, and his interest in the cause and his well known ability demonstrated his eminent fitness for the position he occupies. If the teachers of the rest of the county average up with those of this valley it is a further tribute to the work of the superintendent in building a standard of excellence, morally and socially, of the teachers of the county. Miss Anne C. Smith's paper fully answered the question, "Should we have music in our schools?" and I heard it well spoken of.

H. L. Howe's subject, "Plants and their Children," I did not hear, but know that he did credit to himself with such a theme.

R. R. Allard's article on the civil war was an epitome of the history of that struggle. He furnished each of his audience with a topical outline of his subject and explained in a very interesting manner his method of teaching so as to not confuse the minds of the pupils with a confusion of battles and locations that would be as intelligent as a pieced article in a newspaper.

If Mr. Allard is as good in other departments of school work as in teaching history, his success as a teacher is assured.

E. D. Calkins endorsed the method of the teacher in a few well chosen, feeling words.

"Reading in Primer Grades" was Eliza Stevens' theme, though she explained that it was not her forte, but her article convinced us that she could teach that one of the three R's.

Nettie O. Hart gave a recitation that thrilled the martial spirit of others beside the old veterans present.

Hester Howe's paper on "Mental Arithmetic" deserved the praise it received from those who heard it. From her appearance I supposed she was one of the pupils of the school, but her article placed her right in line with the teachers.

Mella White's recitation was a fitting close to the work of the teachers on the occasion. Her articulation and enunciation was so good that, though she spoke in a low tone, every word was distinctly heard. Her manner was earnest but perfectly natural, and there was an entire absence of stage effect.

M. P. Isenberg spoke on the subject, "The Relation of the Flag to the Public Schools," after which the flag was raised and saluted by the school.

An excellent dinner was served in the lower room, and the conduct of the pupils of the Frankton School during the entire day was creditable alike to pupils and teachers. The presence of the patrons of the district was an explanation of the excellent reputation of the school. The day will be long and pleasantly remembered. Such meetings between teachers, patrons and pupils will result in mutual advantage to all. The parents will have greater respect and appreciation of the teachers. The teachers will feel encouraged and the pupils will realize the importance of learning by the united interest manifested in their behalf.

Greatest Mistake in Our Political History
Oregonian.

The endowment of the blacks with the full right of suffrage was the greatest mistake ever made in our political history. It has only brought trouble to them and increased beyond measure the political difficulties of the country. Since the error is now seen in its results, it may as well be frankly confessed. It mocks the negroes with bestowal of a franchise which the masses of them will not be permitted to exercise, and, in fact, are unfit to exercise, and brings on a race war in which they will in every case be trodden down. Since this is the demonstrated result, there is no need to deceive ourselves about it. Abstention of the blacks from politics, and in particular from combinations to elect persons of their own race to office, is necessary alike for their safety and for the public peace; for the whites will not submit to negro government.

The Great Educator.
Sunday Welcome.

Upon talking with a number of school pupils, bright youths though they are, I found that they were densely ignorant on many common affairs of the day. There is good excuse for it, it seems, because the boys to keep up with their classes are obliged to spend much of their time outside of school hours in study. What spare time they do have they naturally want to devote to play and recreation. As a consequence, they neglect to read very much about the busy affairs and questions of the day. There certainly ought to be, in high schools at least, classes made up to read the great newspapers and magazines and discuss the great questions continually presenting themselves. The best informed men in the country today are those who closely follow the daily newspapers, and discuss the great questions continually presenting themselves, and four years of close newspaper reading will place a man in many respects in advance of the college who neglects the same during his college term.

Kalama's Intelligent Dog.

One of the celebrities of Kalama to which strangers visiting that town rarely fail to secure an introduction is a 16-year old dog, who is endowed with sagacity in proportion to his years. He knows enough, if a nickel is given him, to take it to the butcher shop and buy a piece of meat, enough for a square meal. To the residents of the town the trick has become stale, and they do not give the old dog as many nickels as they used to. But when a stranger comes to town, the dog at once attaches himself to him, and follows him about till some old resident tells him what the animal is looking for. Of course a nickel is forthcoming at once and the brute trots off to the butcher shop and buys his dinner. Strangers do not visit Kalama every day, but the dog waits a dinner that often and waits it badly. A short time ago, having no nickel, he went to the butcher shop, where he had been dealing, and intimated that he desired a piece of meat. The butcher cut off a hunk of meat and tossed it to him, and he started hastily off with it. The butcher called him back and demanded a nickel, and finding the dog had none, kicked him out of the place. Since that time when the animal has a nickel he patronizes another butcher shop.
