

From the report of a meeting of the board of regents of the university of Oregon, held recently in Portland, it is evident that an effective policy of economy is to be pursued in the management of the state institutions of higher learning at Eugene and Portland. Among other reductions, the services of all tutors and assistants were dispensed with, and a resolution passed requesting that the president of the faculty prepare a report for the February meeting of the regents, with a view to consolidating some of the departments and dispensing with some members of the faculty. The annual allowances for the law and medical departments were considerably reduced. This course for economy is a move in the right direction if exercised in a judicious manner, but otherwise it may seriously impair the efficiency of the state university. The salaries of three of the professors were raised, which is commendable, for unless good salaries are paid the institution can not expect to retain an able corps of instructors. But the proposition that the new president of the faculty shall prepare a report for the board of regents showing how a number of the faculty may be dropped is not likely to result in the good expected. It would work all right if the president had the power to select his own assistants, as is the case with the Washington state university and several leading Eastern institutions of the kind, but in the present case it places the president in rather a delicate position, since he and his fellow members all depend for their positions upon the pleasure of the board of regents. The late unpleasantness, instigated by a number of selfish and narrow-minded people of Eugene, which spread over the whole state and came preciously near wrecking the school, and finally resulted in the resignation of Dr. Chapman, was augmented by just such proceedings in the faculty. The university reopens this fall under new auspices that promise much for the future, and it is to be hoped the affairs of the institution will hereafter be conducted in a manner calculated to reflect honor and credit upon the state.

The Mountaineer gets deeper and deeper into the mire the more it undertakes to elucidate the matter of the lease of Hood River as a highway. In its issue of July 29th it asks, "Was there a bond?" Certainly there was. The Mountaineer should interview Clerk Kelsey, and it will learn that the bond in question was filed; that the court instituted the proceedings to open Hood River on a petition of over 100 citizens of Wasco county; that the decision of the supreme court did not show that the county court had exceeded its powers or acted contrary to law, but that the law itself was defective. Will the Mountaineer ascertain the facts in the case and honorably retract its charges that the GLACIER has not correctly stated the facts?

Last year only one passenger out of 2,267,270 carried by the railroads of the United States was killed as a result of railroad accidents. For each passenger so killed 60,542,670 passenger miles were accomplished. It is safer to ride than to walk. If you walk, you may be run over by the cars.

Gov. Roosevelt is looming up as a formidable candidate for president next year. There is a growing feeling in the president's party that he can't be re-elected. Alger's resignation seems to have concentrated the fire of his assaults on the president.

Ask the fee man "Is it not enough for you?" It isn't a safe question to ask any one else.

The Pioneers.

According to announcement, the Pioneers of Hood River and vicinity met on Tuesday in A. O. U. W. hall. The meeting was not as full as might have been expected, several pioneers of the valley failing to respond to the call, probably for the reason that this is a busy season; but what the meeting lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm. Old grizzled and grey veterans gave each other the glad hand and talked over the times when they came the plains across or braved the almost as dangerous passage in those days by way of the isthmus.

The following pioneers were present and registered, giving the date of their arrival in Oregon or on the coast, as follows:

- Mr. Hald, 1847.
Mrs. Hald, 1848.
P. F. Bradford, 1849.
G. W. Backus, 1850.
Amos Underwood, 1852.
Joseph McGuire, 1852.
Mrs. Mariah Moore McGuire, 1852.
M. N. Foley, 1852.
Mrs. Eleanor Willis Foley, 1854.
M. Willis, 1854.
T. R. Conner (native son), 1854.
The meeting was called to order by Joseph McGuire. Hon. John Leland Henderson was introduced and delivered an eloquent address, taking for his subject, "The Pioneer." Being too lengthy for our columns, we can only publish extracts as follows:
The Pioneer! God bless him!

The Pioneer! God bless him! How much that short word, Pioneer, means! The Century dictionary defines a Pioneer as "One who goes before and opens and leads or prepares the way for others coming after." Yes, one who goes before and opens up the way for others coming after—Behold! a wilderness. No human foot except the savage's treads these wilds. Here are no indications of society of civilization. The savage beast and still more savage red man contest with each other the original question of the right of existence. These forests and plains are now as the Almighty created them, unadorned by any monument of man's handiwork. The silent forests and mighty mountains, the gentle valleys and lovely plains, the rushing rivers and singing inland seas, proclaim God's handiwork; but where is man's? The power of the streams is not harnessed to do man's bidding. The forests grow up and pass away, and as trees succeed trees, there is nothing to mark the human, working in conjunction with the divine. Here are no mansions, no churches dedicated to the Creator, none of the hum and stir of city or country civilization. The fertile soil of the peaceful valleys has never been turned by the plow and compelled by man to yield its increase. The vasty plains are yet covered with their pristine verdure, and the buffalo and Indian pony feed at will, to be disturbed and used only when that other animal, the noble red man, wants either a meal or a ride. Into this wilderness, slowly but surely, one by one, comes the pioneer. Yesterday a wilderness but today begins a change.

That is that speak upon the horizon on the beautiful prairie, in the face of the setting sun? Slowly and yet surely it approaches. Now it begins to take shape. It is a "prairie schooner!" A single ox, thin and tired, slowly drags a cart. Beside the cart walks a man, thinner than his ox, dusty, foot-sore, with ragged clothes and run down shoes, but in his face we see, through the lines of care and sorrow, an earnest, quiet determination, a spirit that nothing but death can daunt. It is the face of a hero—a Pioneer. Inside the cart sits the wife and mother, two young children at her side. They too look so tired, and the mother's face is very soiled. The wagon cover is torn and riddled with the bullets and arrows of the savage red men they had met, where their oldest son was slain, together with all the other members of that company then living, which six months before left the banks of the Missouri river with happy hearts and determined wills to search for themselves homes in the far northwest. Some died of sickness and others fell in fierce combat with the Indians; but none turned back. The wilderness has swallowed them up, and the place thereof shall know them no more. Pestilence, hunger, thirst, hardships and trials, almost insupportable, have told the tale, and one by one they fell by the wayside. A grave hastily dug in the prairie, a mound of rock in the mountains, is all there is to show for some of those happy hearts that set out for the "El Dorado." The skeletons of those the Indians have scalped, lie white and moldering under the blue sky, and silently speak for some of that noble band. Others have gone down in the whirlpool and treacherous quicksand. But did famine or thirst, did trials or hardships stop the survivors? No doubt they were often discouraged, but in spite of all they pressed on, determined that nothing but death should stop them, until Babel was reached. Why did they not give up? Why did they not turn back? I will tell you why. They were pioneers! In their bosoms was implanted the love of country, the love of home, the love of their fellow-man, the desire to settle up the country,—they were imbued with that spirit and the desire to go before and open up the way for others coming after. They are men and women who never know failure, whose hearts are stout. They are noble, self-sacrificing and brave as lions. Is this picture overdrawn? No. There are those before me who have themselves passed through just such trials and hardships, who have started out with others from the distant Eastern homes, to new out homes in the Northwest, and have seen their friends and neighbors, and perhaps their own loved ones fall by the wayside, a prey to the savage red man and the beasts of the forest. Every spot of this beautiful land of ours is rendered sacred by the privations and blood of its pioneers.

 Today we sit in this comfortable building in the pretty village of Hood River, and around us is quiet and safety. Not many years ago, the war-whoop of the Indian reverberated through the woods, among which the streets of this town are now laid. Not many years ago the rifle and scalping knife were abroad in the land, and there are those amongst us now, especially Mr. Bradford, Capt. Coe and Mr. Underwood, who can tell of these terrible war back in the 50's. But now how different. On every hand are happy, peaceful homes and all the evidences of a prosperous and advancing civilization. No longer need we fear the attack of the savage. We are surrounded with everything essential to our happiness. Not many years ago this valley was the wilderness we have pictured. The pioneer has made it possible for us to enjoy our present blessings. * * * We have just cause to be proud of our State. In the late war with Spain, as well as in the present war of the Philippines, what Westport is not proud of the achievements of the good war ship Oregon, and the noble Oregon regiment? That battle ship and that regiment has given Oregon a reputation all over the world, and wherever Old Glory waves, all nations have for it a greater respect by far than formerly, and the ship Oregon and the Oregon regiment have had more to do collectively with this increased respect than any other ship that floats the American flag, or any other regiment that wears the uniform of Uncle Sam. And now our boys are coming home, covered with glory. They went at the call of their country, the flower of our commonwealth, not for lure and not even for reputation exclusively, but because they love the stars and stripes, and because their hearts were and are full of noble patriotism. We are glad they are coming home. The greater part of this regiment is composed, I suspect, of the sons of pioneers. Then, friends, we have one of the greatest newspapers in the land. I refer to the Daily Oregonian. I tell you that we can be proud of this able exponent of Americanism. In my opinion, there is not in the land today a paper so entirely American as is the Oregonian. It is for America what Teddy Roosevelt is for America. Now, neither Teddy nor the Oregonian represent my political sentiments in all ways, as you know; but I am an American first and a politician afterward. Wherever I see everything that is entirely and earnestly American, I love and respect it from the bottom of my heart. Hence my veneration and regard for the Oregonian and Teddy Roosevelt. This paper has done more for the state of Oregon than any other single force now operating or that has heretofore operated in our midst. They are the editor of the Oregonian is a pioneer, and this in a large measure accounts for the sturdy, progressive, intellectual excellence of the great daily. Harry Scott has been the life blood of the Oregonian, and he is now more than ever directing its powerful blows on the side of Americanism, and for America as against the world. Rev. J. L. Hershner followed with a few remarks befitting the occasion. In the afternoon a permanent organization was effected. Joseph McGuire was elected president; M. N. Foley, vice president; T. R. Coon, secretary; M. Willis, treasurer. The name, "Oregon Pioneer Association of Hood River." A constitution was adopted which fixes the first Tuesday in May for the annual meeting. The executive board is authorized to arrange for other meetings whenever they think proper. A vote of thanks was given J. L. Henderson and Rev. J. L. Hershner for their able addresses. The secretary was instructed to procure a copy of Mr. Henderson's address for filing away for preservation. All pioneers are requested to give their names to the secretary and join the association. There is no initiation fee nor dues.
