of the United States established. Further discussions with his cabinet may change somewhat the president's views as to the form of civil government best suited to meet the situation. but at present the commission idea predominates. Professor Schurmann, president of the peace commission, is understood to favor this kind of control and a historical review recently prepared for the president, showing that the United States has frequently adopted this method of control of new territory in a transitory state, has deeply impressed members of the administration. It is appreciated that it will be some years before the islands are ripe for even a territorial form of government, such as is proposed for Porto Rico, so that control by commissioners, much the same as in the District of Columbia, is deemed a happy substitute for a military government and a safe and simple means of control preliminary to the establishment of a territorial form of government, when it may be possible to give the natives generally the right of suffrage. The plan under consideration contemplates three commissioners, one an army officer, to have charge of fiscal affairs, another a naval officer to have control of the customs, and the third, a leading native officer of legal experience to look after the judiciary, all three to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate
