Most of these pupils are well grounded in the rudiments of an education, though, as all their learning is in Spanish, the task of acquiring English methods and renewing their knowledge of elementary branches in our tongue is almost as great as making their start over again. Curious indications of the hatred they bear Spain occasionally crops out in the most unexpected places. It was noticed once that many of the boys, in saying the Lord's prayer in their native tongue, and hence such properties as a rechanging hands are going to Eastern or European owners, and the vast wealth soon to be dug from Oregon soil will go out of the state as fast as it is produced.

It is not that the lads from the tropics were especially fond of the fruit, but in explanation of the remark one of the boys said in effect: "Spain one of the boys makes us buy our flour of her merchants. We are an independent people, and until we can get our flour without paying the tax we will not ask God to give it to us."

The attempt made several months ago by two London daily newspapers to publish a Sunday edition, after the pattern of all big American papers, proved a flat failure. The English people sat down hard on the proposition for fear of the demoralizing influences it would exert, notwithstanding that the principal work on a Sunday paper is done the day before, or that Monday papers are prepared on Sunday. Puritanic influences are evidently not so effectual in the United States, where the Sunday papers are made a special feature of journalism. though it is noticeable that the circula-tion of Sunday papers in the staid old towns of the East and South is not near fortable quarters. so big as the week-day issues, while in issue is often from 25 to 50 per cent planer. greater.
